MOORESTOWN, N.J. - Teachers in Moorestown State School Districts are the 104th highest-paid in the state, according to data recently released by the state ahead of the 2019-20 school year. The school district pays teachers an average salary of $75,343, a 0.74 percent increase from last year,74,786. That's more than the state average of $68,985, up 1.6 percent from last year. Overall, 232 school districts pay more than the state average. The release is part of the State Department's Taxpayer Guide to Education's Education Expenditure, which has just been released showing the average salary in every New Jersey school district and charter school. In addition to the median wage, the site also shows the total costs of each district, average daily enrollment and students from the dispatch areas, spending per student and the district's total budget expenditures for 2018 and 2019. The school district spent a total of $87,869,617 in the 2017-18 school year, priced at $22,066 per student. The ratio between the student and the teacher is 11:7. It was 11:6 last year. MOORESTOWN, N.J. - Teachers' salaries are rising, rising, those in the Moorestown Public School District. Six-figure wages are no longer uncommon for education workers in New Jersey. In fact, nearly 10,000 teachers make $100,000 or more. The Ministry of Education has published an annual list of teachers and their salaries for 2019. And the list of educators earning $100,000 or more - a list that barely had teachers on it more than a decade ago - has grown in recent years. It is also a small fraction of the more than 100,000 people who teach in public and charter schools in this state. In 2018-2019, the average salary for teachers was $68,985, according to a patch analysis of payroll data from public school districts and charter schools. Growth was about 1.6 per cent higher than the previous year.
