The information below is from the Grammar Manual. I always thought that everyone, like one word, was the right choice in the example below. Do you agree that there should be one word? Written as two words, each refers to each individual who makes a group and means every person. Example: My mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. Two words: my mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. Every man. Everyone who offered to help thanked my mother. All men, all of us. Thank you, SwissPete. I'm embarrassed. All these years, I've had this mistake. Good God! Two words: my mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. Every man. Everyone who offered to help thanked my mother. All men, all of us. What's the difference in meaning? I don't see any difference between every man in this group and all the people in this group. Two words: my mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. Every man. I don't agree. The expected sentences for me in this context are: My mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. My mother would like to thank everyone who offered to help during her illness. To use every single of my mother I would like to thank the people who offered to help during her illness - each of them. Oh, honey, Andy! I'm surprised you're recommending a pleonastic cliché. Andy's comment makes sense to me. I wouldn't use anyone in a phrase where everyone can be used, as in #2. I'd use it in a phrase like Each of the students playing the trumpet where each one means it. I'm not sure that's possible without it. And I'm not pleosontic. It just grows my beard funny. The point is, everyone means the same as everyone, and everyone means the same as everyone else. Not everyone has to follow, though it's common. Here's a pretty nice example from the Daily Mirror where it's not there: Parking - so-called because Chichester is twinned by Chartres in France - is included among the 29 regional winners who go on for national awards later this year. And just look at some of the other winners - it stuns everyone. Hi, everybody! I hope everything's okay. Not only is it important to live your life the way you want, it's important that you let everyone live their lives the way they want. Should the word all (one word) in the sentence above be replaced with two words each, or should it remain as it is? Thank you very much. Last edited: Sep 16, 2019 Everyone has a pronoun that only applies to people. Each is a pronoun that can be used for people or things (e.g. There were three highways at this intersection and each was blocked. There were three highways connected at this intersection and each was blocked. This is a good example, as both can be used to achieve different meanings. At this intersection there were three motorways connected and each [highway] was blocked. At that intersection there were three highways connected and all [all the people in the vehicles] were blocked. To reply here, you must log on or register. Do you mix everything and everything every time you use them? As interchangeable as they may seem, they are not. Continue reading to learn when everyone is correct, and when each should keep the space between words. Every vs. Every Case Trick to tell everyone and each apart is a word. If you're using it for everyone, it's never right. By contrast, everyone is correct only when you use it behind it. Here are some examples:Incorrect: You are all special to me. Each of you is special to me. Wrong: I tried all these treats. Okay: I've tried all these aneps. Wrong: you ignored the rules of the school. Okay: you've ignored all the school rules. From is your key to understanding which phrase to use. But why would that change? That's because the difference between each and every part of the speech. So what is correct: everyone or everyone? Even though they use the same words, you can't use everyone and all in the same way. One replaces names and names, the other is a self-named and modifiable phrase. Everyone is the correct word you use when you talk about a non-specific group of people. It's an unspecified pronoun that takes over the place of names and pronunciation in a sentence. Everyone always refers to people, they never object. Here are some examples of how everyone replaces the name phrase in a sentence. I want to thank all my friends and family for attending our wedding. I'd like to thank everyone who attended our wedding. Did you ask all the people in the department if they could come to the meeting? Did you ask everyone if they could come to the meeting? Kyle, Anderson, Becky and Louise agree to go to the restaurant. Everyone agrees we should drive to the restaurant. Even though everyone talks about more than one person, it's always one-minded. Indefinite nodees that end on -one (like everyone and anyone) and -body (like all or someone) are single-minded. This can change the object-verb consent of the sentence if everyone replaces the plural of names. Each one is a word book. One is a self-name in a phrase, and each is a modification. Specifies that you refer to each member of the group. It's a sonomous for everyone. This is another way to test whether you should use or each in a sentence: replace it with each to see how it sounds. For example, each of these posters has a key. Each of these posters has a key. I checked with every neighbor to see if it was my new RV. I checked with every neighbor to see if it was my new RV. Make sure each of these gift baskets is marked. Make sure each of these gift baskets is marked. There's a gift card under each of the banquet chairs. There's a gift card under each of the banquet chairs. Note that the word follows each one because you specify each member of a larger group (posters, neighbors gift baskets and banquet chairs). Like everyone, everyone is ingularen. Unlike all of them, it can relate to objects and not just people. Are you ready to challenge yourself? Make sure you can determine whether all or all of them are the correct choice in these sentences. I asked ____ about the new changes website. _____ talk about a new reality TV show. Education Everyone has a pronoun, which means everyone, all the people who are bringing themselves into the group. They all refer to a group of people as a whole. Words are interchangeable. Each is a phrase that means every person who makes a group of people, of every individual. Each applies to every individual in the group. Phrases are interchangeable. Interestingly, the word as used to refer to a person, or one of these people, was originally pronounced with a long o, displayed in the word itself. It wasn't until the 14th century that it began to be excommunicable with an initial w sound, as it is today.
