1 win and 10 nominations. See more awards Learn more Edit Every has bad mornings. You wake up late, you drown your knock, you burn toast, but for a man named Arthur Dent (Martin Freeman), it goes far beyond a bad day. When he learns that his friend is actually an alien with advanced knowledge of the impending destruction of Earth, he is transported from Earth seconds before he is blown up to take the way for a new hyperspace highway. And as if that's not enough, throw in the wanted police, Earth II, insane electronic encyclopedia, no tea what it is, a chronically depressed robot and a search for the meaning of life, and you have the greatest adventure from Earth. Read more: Several different versions of the series survive on video. It was originally made as a six-episode BBC series (based on Douglas Adams radio scripts), but for the video cut has been re-edited in places. HHG was made on two SP tapes, as well as on one large SLP/EP tape. The SLP/EP works continuously (although the subtitle Part One) and cut into a kind of movie. The ends of episodes are sometimes difficult to discern, except for a bad cut to the end, where Arthur tells the Mice? And the music climax then cuts sharply. The SP version comes in two parts and seems to come in both neo-welcome episodes and movies. All of them are in some ways different from the original transmissions. Scenes like Vogon Airlock were cut from some retranslations; they appear here. Other scenes previously unaired include Arthur and Ford searching for the signature Slartibartfast on the glacier and appearing on only a few versions.
