Watch videos from the Internet from YouTube for Android. This is the official app that allows you to watch videos from the Internet directly on the Android device. YouTube works just like its web version: subscribe to channels, search videos, see recommended videos, share videos and that it also has voice search and instant search suggestions. You can also throw videos on tv, comment on videos, and also loved and disliked them and letting the world know how you feel about said video. Enjoy watching YouTube videos for Android. Download YouTube Music uses a huge amount of music already on the video service YouTube and creates a service that is more acceptable for listening to sound. The app itself is really more of a modified YouTube, where curation is focused on music and video related to music, but YouTube Red completely changes the game, turning the app into a full-fledged music streaming service, complete with offline playback and background streaming, and even a great feature of just streaming audio without video. Other images Listen to and watch music on your Android device with YouTube Music. YouTube Music is a free app for Android that not only allows you to find all the songs you are looking for, but also allows you to discover new songs. Explore the various playlists and recommendations offered by YouTube Music to fit your context, tastes and trends. This new music streaming service from YouTube has been completely reimagined. It's even easier to find the albums, singles, concerts, covers or remixes you're looking for. For example, a new feature might find a song by entering lyrics. The paid version of YouTube Music (Music Premium) offers continuous listening without advertising or downloading for offline listening through the Offline Mixtape feature. But that doesn't mean you can't manage your WordPress blog and ensure that everything runs smoothly with your Android device. I've been running a successful WordPress-based blog for almost a decade now, and during that time have taken advantage of more and more tools to optimize my blog workflow. With the help of a team of passionate contributors I was able to build a blog in trusted news and information resources in my niche, and about 70% of my blog management (it's administration time, but not writing) I perform using my Android and these apps and services. Here's how you can do the same. The Obvious Bit: Use WordPress You Work WordPress is a blog, so of course you need an official WordPress app installed (one of several ways of blogging on Android, and perhaps the best). Setting up an account will require you to enter your blog's URL and username and account password. In a few moments, you'll be able to create new posts, check stats, and moderate comments. This last bit can be time saving, too - if something needs moderation while you're out and about, it takes no more than 30 seconds to read and approve or reject it. With WordPress setting up, you're ready to start blogging and respond to any notifications that pop-ups. If you're an off-the-cuff kind of blogger, that might be enough for you. But if you're running a busy blog with a few daily updates, you'll need a workflow that is a little more reliable. Along with WordPress, I use Facebook and Twitter, along with Feedly for news gathering, and Google News alerts relevant to the topic of my blog. News Gathering with Twitter Secret use Twitter from your blog is not all about social networks, although it is important. Along with finding new followers and building relationships with them, you should also use the search feature as well as following accounts that are relevant to the topic of your blog. Once you've followed enough accounts that you'll find useful, you can use Twitter as a news source. Whether you're using an official app or one of many alternatives, tweets can be posted directly to the WordPress app using the general time button, while any links that are included in the tweet can be opened in your preferred Android browser and posted in WordPress. When you share a link to WordPress, if you're not going to write it immediately, save the link as a project as well as a few notes. It is useful to give the project a meaningful name to help you later. Using Feedly To Find Interesting Material in a similar way, you can use Feedly (or any other news reader, but Feedly is the most popular replacement for Google Reader) to find news sources that can share information you can share with readers - with appropriate attribution, of course. It doesn't matter where the news happens, your readers will be more interested in how you present it rather than who released it. The secret here is not to go to the top. You can get caught up in the various items that appear in the newsreader app, and once you subscribe to ten or more channels you are pretty much locking yourself in some pretty heavy research. Keep it easy and relevant, focused on the channels that matter. After Find the material you want to share with your readers, use the sharing feature to save the project in WordPress to get back to it later. Set up Google Alerts Want an automated news collection sent directly to your inbox? Of course you do, and Google can provide this with Google Alert. You should already know how to use but if not, it's simple: head to www.google.com/alerts, create an alert using the appropriate phrase, add your email address, and a warning is created. Once these alerts land in your inbox, you can view them, open interesting links, and whatever you think you can use can be saved as a WordPress project. Don't forget Google now! If you installed Google Now on your Android device, you can use this to alert you when interesting information that might be interesting is published. Searches that are made on your phone or tablet or desktop using the same Google account will be memorized, and the relevant new articles will be found and displayed on the Google Now screen. As with other methods of researching the content of your blog featured here, you can view these links and save them as a project in WordPress for your attention later (or get blogs right there and then). What about all these projects? You might as well have several projects in your WordPress Dashboard by this point. What are you going to do with them? Well, it really depends on how you run your blog. The best option is to reach out to them one by one, based on their importance to your blog as you see them. For example, I will basically browse through a list of draft posts in a desktop browser and on a daily basis assign them to each member of my blog contributors' team who then produce content based on the link and their interpretation of it. In some cases it can give news a different spin or focus; On others, the link can be the inspiration for a completely different type of post. Blogging with Android: More powerful than you think! These five techniques can help you find stuff that you can use on your blog or inspire yourself to produce new articles. Every time you spent content research for your blog effectively now automated and processed by the Android and Google devices. This is a pretty big deal for those who manage a relatively busy blog. If you're not using these automation tips and The WordPress app already, then now is the time to start! Do you use your Android smartphone or tablet for blogging?
