She has spent years working through a number of jobs across her homeland and Australia, before settling on the Surf Coast and making her dreams come true in Geelong. She has recently pursued a lifelong desire to own a shop, opening the doors of The Book Bird on Pakington Street late last year, sharing her love of reading with the Geelong West community. Having my own store is something I've always dreamed of, ever since playing stores as a kid with my Monopoly money, Anna remembers. The idea really started to gather some momentum during my time as a bookseller in Melbourne when I realized I had the potential to call shots and set up my own bookstore, doing things my way. Leaving school early, Anna had a record store in Dunedin at the age of just 18. He first ventured to Australia a year later, heading to Queensland, where he moved around a lot of odd jobs and trying to avoid the humidity. After a brief and terrifying period as a soul-destroying telemarketer, I returned home in search of salvation, which I found through my first bookselling role at Otago University Bookshop, says Anna, smiling. I have spent the last five or more years honing my bookselling skills in Melbourne before moving to Anglesea with my partner, My time until the bird book was about to fly. New bookstore owner Anna Tweed. Pic: Cormac HanrahanTo Anna, reading is just as important as breathing - she finds it to be an intimate, lonely activity. He enjoys the moment he opens a book and sees immediately through someone else's eyes. You're still alone. Still, they are connected simultaneously and all through words on a page that a smart person has so carefully thought out, he says. For me, reading is complete magic, a pure delight. The biased threat of tablets and technology doesn't worry her. Anna says she knows there's always going to be a need for books in the world. There will always be naysayers who love naysay so much but the reality is, regardless of advances in technology, there is no substitute for a real book or a real bricks-and-mortar bookstore. The Bird of the Book. Pic: Cormac HanrahanThe store has something for everyone, Anna insists. There's a range of fantasy, a children's corner and a toy box, cookbooks to salivate over and then there's extensive nonfiction covering art and design, history, military, science, music and even business and politics. We specialize in the handmade balances of the super stock of publishers, so we have an eclectic range of titles at great prices, he says. In addition to the books we also have gift certificates and greeting cards, as well as the beautiful Cavallini gift wrapper that makes an excellent poster. There are currently bold plans for the future of the store. Anna's short-term goal is to finally introduce an informal book club. In the long run, he would like to expand into a cafe and bookstore function and introduce an after-school literacy program providing the right location and the right staff could be found. She has found that interest from the opening is overwhelmingly positive, supportive and encouraging, particularly from the local community and local retailers. It's relaxed, has everything you need, including beautiful trees, and people are down to earth and friendly. It's so wonderful to finally be a part of the street and have the opportunity to provide the community with a bookstore with a twist. There is a huge range of so many types of fiction, non-fiction and specialty fields, but given my wife's interest in birdwatching, the special appeal was a series of books on this subject that I have never seen before. They also covered my interests with a series of books on music I've never seen before. And, I'm not sure how they do it, but the prices are so reasonable that you can easily afford some.
