According to Laurel Storm Gmail, the priority mailbox feature can help you determine which messages require your immediate attention and which may be waiting. Having it show up when you check your mail on your Android phone or tablet, however, can make you miss important messages. While there is no way to completely remove the priority mailbox from Gmail, you can guarantee that you see the default mailbox view, not priority when you open the Gmail app. Open the Gmail app and tap your device's Menu button. Click Settings. Depending on the Android version the device is running, you may need to click More to display this option. Click on the account for which you want to disable the priority mailbox. Click the Priority Mailbox button to disable the feature. The change is automatically saved. Tap the Device Back button twice to return to the Gmail app. Select Inbox inbox to switch back to your default inbox. Good thoughts can come from anywhere, at any time. It's available almost everywhere, it's reduced to ultimate simplicity, and it constantly saves you work, so you don't have to. This is what Adam calls the Holy Grail of ubiquitous text capture. Two Android customers provide the best Simplenote experience. This author prefers the paid ($2.37-ish) SolidNote, but only because of the slight polish on the controls and seemingly less lag during input. mNote, a free alternative, does just as well as work just by displaying and saving your Simplenote stuff, and maybe you won't experience the same lag. Despite all the cool performance modern technology was born, the holy grail for me... Evernote is a more established universal capture tool that syncs with almost every available computing platform, and its Android client has just undergone an overhaul, making it a very viable tool. But we also dug in as Springpad popped up while Evernote was still getting its Android base, providing a nicely different alternative. More Death of the mailbox by Gmail is especially difficult to swallow for fans of alternative service Google mail. It's easy to understand the frustration, as inboxes offer a variety of unique features. So what are your options if you come from a private email app? We have you covered with a look The best alternatives to Google Inbox on Android.The Gmail team has been hard at work porting features from an alternative customer to their own app. These features include snoozing, nudges, and clever composing. Unfortunately, we still have to wait for similar email bundling and pinning. It's a great alternative nonetheless, but we just hope Google brings the missing features sooner rather than later. This was a big surprise when Newton Email was resurrected earlier this year as the new parent company Essential closed the app in 2013. Fortunately, the subscription-based service is back and you get a lot of bang for your buck. Newton's notable features include reading receipts, email scheduling, cancellation, replay, metric ton of application integrations, and Recap functionality. The BlackBerry Hub is not the first inbox replacement one normally thinks. But the company's combined email and social media mailbox has many features. From support incoming priority and snoozing to customizable swipe actions and grouped emails, the BlackBerry Hub can definitely hold its own. The newest Android entry on the list, Spark first made its name on iOS and Mac. The email app stands out for its priority email functionality, pinned messages, reminders, planning, repeat, email delegation, and customizable swipes. It's also free, so you have nothing to lose trying it. One of the most popular third-party email apps around, Blue Mail offers slick design and a plethora of features. The app offers quiet clocks, snoozing, Smart Cluster organization, and dark mode. Now, if only the dark mode was OLED-friendly... That's all for our best alternatives to Google Inbox on Android. Let us know if we missed your favorite choice! You can also find an open source desktop app on the link and an inbox theme to extend Gmail Chrome to the previous link. Over the past decade or so, phone calls have become extinct as our primary form of communication with most people, with text messages as a substitute. And if you're going to use text messages as much as you do, you might as well use the best apps to do so. Let's talk about them. Best for most people: Android Messages Android Messages vision Google for SMS applications on Android, and the stock version on Nexus and Pixel devices. The good news is that it's available in the Play Store, so it works on any phone and it's totally free. What makes this app such a good choice is its clean, minimal interface - it just works really well. It's not filled to the brim with functions, it just does what it does. Indeed, this is what most of us have come to expect from Google apps. Like all good SMS apps, it supports MMS (multimedia messages), but it also has a few other tricks up its sleeve. This allows users to attach the following: Photos and GIF stickers Voice Recordings Recordings The data you can also set up conversations by assigning certain colors to contacts, but it will also do it for you automatically if you don't want to bother with the setting up of each contact. After a while, you start to associate each contact with their color, so you can take a look at your phone and know exactly who the text is just by color. It's a simple feature that just makes sense. In short, if you're looking for simple text messaging apps that just work, this one is for you. Best for convenience: Facebook Messenger is almost all of us on Facebook, and if you're anything like me, you use Facebook Messenger almost as much as SMS to talk to friends and family. But here's the thing: you can actually do both things directly from the same interface, since Facebook Messenger supports SMS. It even has what I consider the best feature of the app: Chat Heads for text messages. So you can combine all your messages in this one place. I'm digging it. If you're already a Facebook Messenger user, you can easily include SMS in the app to give it a try. First, open the app and click on the profile picture in the top right corner. In this menu, scroll down and find a text message. Click on this and then click on the SMS slider in Messenger. A pop-up may ask if you want to use Messenger as a default customer- just click Yes. All kinds of new options will be available after that, so feel free to customize it to your liking. Otherwise, you're ready to start using SMS in Messenger. It's also worth noting that aside from the usual Messenger features (such as Chat Heads), Messenger also does this cool thing where it groups together business SMS-any kind of texts that you get from businesses with promotions etc. I think it's pretty cool. Also, if you just want to see SMS and keep your Facebook messages from your feed, just click the SMS button at the top next to the profile picture. Bam. Oh, and it's free. It's hard to beat that price. Best for Power Users: Textra If you're looking for all the bells and whistles from your SMS client, then look no further than Textra. This thing is chock full of killer features, but it still somehow manages not to feel bloated. But actually, I think that's what makes Textra so great: at first glance, it might be as simple as you want it to be, but if you feel like digging in, you can really customize it to do a lot more. Out of the box, it has a clean, dark interface. But if you're not that it has supportive themes like, dark, black, and even a smart mode that will during the day and switch to night mode at a certain time. You can also fully customize the color palette used, as well as the chat bubble and color icon. So if you're into aesthetics, you can pretty much get a Textra look watch Don't rush it. But there's a lot more to be honest, more than you would feel like reading if I tried to cram it all into this post. However, here's a quick list of some of my favorite things about Textra: You can rename group texts. You can specify the limit of sending mms messages, and Textra will shrink accordingly. Sent sounds are optional. It supports blacklists of numbers. Fast answers, notifications, and everything else related to notifications is customizable. It has scheduled messages.... and really, this is just the beginning. Like I said, if you're a power user, this is the app you want. There's only one drawback: the free version has ads that appear as the first entry on your SMS list. It's really annoying. But there's $2.99 in app purchases that removes ads that are easily worth the price if you find that you're digging this app as I dig this app. Now, armed with this new knowledge, go ahead and text.
