The present continuous time is one of the most popular stresses among students. It's easy to form and its use is crystal clear (at least at the beginning). However, when it comes to forming questions, students often fail. To avoid this, I have come up with a number of activities to help my students, and I would like to share them with you now. ADVERT: In this post, there is a video to teach the subject of the word, infographic, a few interactive exercises and logical sheets. In the first part, it is important to teach the formation of YES/NO questions in the present continuous time. Print the following sheet: Present continuous questions - sheet In the first part, there is a column of sentences that students should turn into questions. Tell them to use colors to guide them. Help those who are struggling. Check out the questions. Then tell the students to convert the sentences into the second column. Now your students should be able to shape issues in the present continuous time. And as they discovered the rules themselves, they sure remember them well. Show the following infographic. Demonstrate how infographics work. Write one of the questions on the board. Ask the students what the question is. Point to the word in the infographic. Call the color. Now point the question on the board and reveal what follows the first word. Find a sequel in rectangles and explain that the right answers are the two possibilities behind it. It took my students only two examples to understand the formation of short answers. Go back to the sheet and ask the students to write both short answers below the questions they have formed before. Check their answers. Before you start teaching questions with question words, teach the question of the word first. Here's a video learning the question of the word: You can use the following infographic too: Once students know the basic words of the question, it's time to practice them. In the following video, students see the answer, and their task is to provide the correct word of the question. Now teach students how to shape issues starting with WH... words in the present uninterrupted time. Print the next sheet. ADVERT: Present Continuous WH Issues - Video Content Index sheet: Job description These activities are specifically designed to practice not only answers but also questions now uninterrupted which is what students find more difficult. two exercises to practice questions and short answers present continuous.
