The next time you plan to drive and want to use your Android phone's handy GPS navigation, don't email yourself an address or enter it over the phone. Do as Dave Viner does and use Google My Maps to save time. My wife bought me a Garmin GPS for Christmas last year. After showing her Google Navigation on my... At any destination you want to go to, you can now drive Save My Cards, choose a Directions card and repeat for any other place you regularly drive, or just driving this time. When you have an Android phone, open the Maps app, select Layers and select My Cards. Now it's much easier to pick and click Navigate on your points of interest rather than clicking away while your passengers are slowly getting annoyed at the intrusive, geeky ways. When it comes to getting things done on your mobile phone, you can never be fast enough. There have been so many changes to the Android kernel over the years, however, that you may have missed a few ways that you can make things faster or more efficient right now. Answering phone calls with canned messages

Is one of those features that we all know exists, but many of us forget because we don't tend to study the user interface when we get a phone call. However, most Android phones have the ability to send a ready-made text message to the person calling you when you can't speak. In an Android warehouse, you can do this by swiping up when you get a call, rather than left or right. Then you just choose any of the preliminary messages and your phone will automatically respond with that message to the person calling. Go to App Info by dragging icons to your home screenIt's another trick that's easiest to stock in Android. If you need to go to the app settings, go to the app drawer, drag the icon to the home screen and you should see App Info appear at the top. Drag the icon to this and release it. This will go straight to the recording of this app in the Settings app. Some skinned versions of Android don't support this, but many custom launchers do. If your phone doesn't support it and you want a launcher that does, Nova Launcher is our choice. Call, text, or go to your contacts' address by clicking their PhotoThis feature so old that many Android users may never have known that it was lurking there the whole time. In many Android apps, including set, contacts, Gmail, Messages and more, you'll see arrow in the corner of the contact image. This means that you can touch their photos and quickly go to all the different ways you can connect with them. If you have the address information stored, you can even easily open Google Navigation to your home. This is one of those features that rewards those of those Keep your contacts in order, so if you have a mess, it might be helpful to do some spring cleaning and join all of these duplicate entries. Add contact, bookmark, or referral widgets to common tasksIf you want to take the last tip one step further, you can add contact widgets to your home screen. 1x1 contact widgets can also be added to the folder, so you can connect with all your loved ones through any environment in just a couple of taps. You can also create bookmark-sized widgets, frequent navigation requests, Google Drive files, Dropbox folders, Gmail tags, settings spoofing, and more. If you're an old Android veteran, you may know this feature better as a shortcut. Some phones still label it as such and hide them under different categories, but overall Google seems to be steering the tongue away from the shortcuts and just lumps them all together like widgets. Using the Android keyboard as a Text ExpanderText extension isn't just a desktop domain. In Android, you can create shortcuts in a custom dictionary that function as text extenders. This can work for everything from turning lh into a Lifehacker or l into your email address. There are a few places where auto-wrap is disabled and the shortcuts won't work, but in most cases, you can do a short job of long phrases. Android. There have already been some pretty great applications for text extension for Android. However, if... Read moreUse pronouns and Good, Google's Voice SearchThis one is pretty new, so you'll be forgiven for not realizing that it was there. However, Google has started rolling out some improvements for search on Android. First, you've always been able to call a voice search in Google Now with Good, Google Hot Word. Now, it works even when you look at search results. Let's say you want to know who's playing second fiddle to Clark Gregg in this new Marvel show. Okay, Google. Who plays SHIELD Agents? Google will respond by scrolling through the list of actors. Now you're curious when you can watch it. Okay, Google. When does this happen? Google knows from your previous search that this applies to show Agents of SHIELD and will be looking for what you are looking for. Being able to continue using voice actions without touching your phone is an added bonus. Find the app you're looking for with Intitle: Operator It's no secret that the Play Store is full of a lot of garbage. Google has improved search results a bit in recent years, but it can still be a pain to find a specific app. Fortunately, you can use a familiar intitle: a search operator to narrow down the results. You can also use allintitle: to search for multiple words at the same time. ATT always offers special to keep your customers happy.
