Download I'm a big fan of open source software because it's free and usually has the same as a commercial app! One of the drawbacks of open source software is the lack of support, but the problem usually consists of active forums and community themes started by avid followers. There are free software applications that you can download for office performance, Internet, multimedia, drawing, Windows utilities, etc., but if you're not familiar with open source software, you may not know which program is the best of the myriad options. This is the only downside about freeware: some of them contain junkware as a bundle of apps or annoying toolbars. In this article, I'm going to mention a few websites that I visit quite often when searching for safe and clean free apps to download. Gizmo's Freeware Reviews Gizmo's Freeware Review site should be the best site on the net to search for great free apps. There are a bunch of sites that have huge lists of free programs with tiny reviews of each program, but the Gizmo site is insanely popular because they spend time writing detailed reviews and testing each program that they are considering to make sure it works as intended. You can go directly to the category at the top of the page like Windows, Mac, Linux, iPhone/iPad, etc. You can also scroll down and click on the panel: Best lists of free programs, free categories and security masters. I highly recommend going through a security master's note because it gives you a list of security software tailored to your operating system, your level of knowledge with computers and your exposure to risky online activities. The master will also tell you how to make sure your computer is not infected yet, and will give you suggestions on how to protect yourself in the future from malware, spyware and viruses. In addition to all this, the site has a blog with a huge number of articles on all kinds of useful technical topics. A lot of the articles they refer to are from their review pages and this gives you a very deep understanding of the topic. Ninite Ninite is another very popular service that I use a lot with my friends and family when setting up new computers or when I have to reformat and reinstall the operating system on the computer. Basically, it's a program that lets you download multiple free apps at once and install them without having to click Next, Next, Next! Simply select the apps you want to install and click the Get Installer button. Outside of just making it super easy to install free apps, it also has a few other major benefits. First, all the software is super safe and clean. Even if the app has a toolbar turned on like Java, Ninite won't let it install the panel It also downloads the latest versions of the software directly from official websites and checks hash values to ensure integrity. Second, you have to keep the installer somewhere on your computer and not delete it, because running it again will be Check out all the free apps and download new versions, if any. If you already have the latest version installed, it will just skip this program. So, using the installation, like having a free program that will update all your apps automatically too! What I like most too is that it will install a 64-bit version of the software if I run the installer on a 64-bit operating system. This program is just huge and will save you a lot of time. NirSoft If you've read a decent number of my previous posts, you'll know that I just love people over at NirSoft. It's basically a site with a bunch of tiny utilities designed for very specific tasks. Want to copy the videos stored in your browser cache? There is a usefulness for this. Want to control the volume of your computer from the wheel of your mouse? There is a usefulness for this. Want to see all the passwords stored in your browser? There is a usefulness for this. You get the picture! There are over a hundred of these really useful utilities that work very well. They also don't contain crapware or anything else. PortableApps you got a USB stick right? So why not install PortableApps there! These are all your free apps stored on USB sticks that you can use anywhere on any machine. They have up to 300 legal versions of the apps that have been upgraded to run portably on a USB stick. Apps are updated frequently and there are no ads, no spyware, no advertising software, no time limits etc. It's just free and it can be very handy if you happen to travel a lot. What's really awesome is that you can throw it all into the Dropbox folder and run everything right from there! You don't even have to worry about holding a flash drive with you. FileHippo FileHippo has been around for a very long time and it is still one of the best sites to search for good free programs. What I end up using is FileHippo more than anything else downloading older versions of the software. It's not often, but there are times when you don't want the latest version of the program. Maybe because it can't work on an old system or because it has an error that causes problems in your system, so the only option is to download an earlier version. The only problem I've seen from the site recently is that some programs, but not all, now come with FileHippo's own downloading rather than direct download program. This kit tries to install an advertisement on your system, so you have to be careful to stop it when installing the program. I could only find this with a couple of programs, so the vast majority still directly to the program files, but because of this new behavior and too many ads on the site, I can't recommend it site overwhelmingly. Mentioned sites outside of these, there are several other sites that I visit, but they usually contain contain reviews without real reviews or anything else. However, you won't find spyware or malware on these sites. MajorGeeks - Looks like it was developed in the 90s and has probably been around since then, but a great site for many technical tools. Lots and lots of technical utilities that are hard to find elsewhere. SnapFiles is a good clean site with minimal ads and clear categories for free software, shareware, etc. FileForum BetaNews - You can usually find the latest free apps here before they reach other download sites. Don't know how they do it, but you'll find the latest software here. Sites to avoid you may be wondering why I didn't mention free sites like SourceForge and CNET? Well, that's because I don't recommend these sites anymore. They went down the path of making money and not link to the actual official downloads, but instead make you download your own own installer. CNET is the worst because it forces you to go through multiple screens, trying to get you to install junkware before you can install the actual app you wanted to download. For me, it's easy to avoid all junk, but many people will end up with a promotional on their computer and have no idea why. Unfortunately, such Download.com, which are the same as CNET, show high in search results, making them harder to avoid. Most of the nothing on CNET you'll find on one of the sites that I mentioned above. Enjoy!
