Home English Grammar Verb level: intermediate there are two times in English - past and present. The past time in English is used: to talk about the past, to talk about hypotheses (when we present something) for politeness. There are four past tense forms in English: The past is simple: I've worked in the past continuous: I've worked past perfect: I've worked past completely unbroken: I've worked we use these forms: It worked at McDonald's. He's been working there since July. He worked at McDonald's. He's been working there since July. refer to the present or the future in hypotheses: It can be dangerous. Suppose they get lost. This use is very common in wishes: I wish it wasn't that cold. and in terms if: He could get a new job if he really tried. If Jack had played, they probably would have won. For hypotheses, wishes and conditions in the past, we use the past perfect: It was very dangerous. What if you got lost? I wish I hadn't spent that much money in the last month. I'd help him if he asked. and also talk about the present in a few polite expressions: Sorry, I was wondering if it was a train for York. I just hoped you could help me.
