Money Eds Butterfly really should be called Ed's Butterfly. Adding money helps in its description. Perhaps a better name would be bey Money by Ed Origami Battel. The model was created by Ed Halley. You can also see his original text instructions here, or you can see the traditional origami charts here. Instructions for Eds Butterfly Money Start with a crisp dollar bill with a black side face up. Fold and turn the dollar bill in half. Fold the left side of the dollar bill so that the bottom edge of the paper is aligned with the middle fold made in step 1. Repeat on the right side, except to fold the paper down so the top edge of the paper meets the middle crease. Turn the model over. Fold the top right corner down. Fold the bottom left corner up. The valley folds a hanging strip of paper and tuck it under the main body of the model. The mountain crease (fold back) to the right side of the model, so that it is behind the left side of the model. Turn a quarter clockwise. Make a chest (body) butterfly: Mountain crease (fold back), right half behind the left half of the model. Unfold. Make a valley crease that extends from the butterfly's head to the base of the model. The angle of the crease can change, it will change the size of the chest. The convenient endpoint is at the mark of a quarter of the edge of the dollar bill. Fold the left wing back to the left. Follow the existing crease made in step 6. The valley folded the left wing back to the right. Make the left and right wings symmetrical by joining the tips of the wing (green dots). This is what it looks like. The chest is complete. The next steps will be for the manufacture of the upper and lower wings. Open the model to resemble a butterfly. Make the lower wings: Mountain fold the right wing behind the left wing. Follow the ridge where the paper overlaps on itself. Expand back to the main shape of the butterfly. Repeat the equivalent mountain fold on the left side. Make the upper wings: Mountain folds (fold back) the top of the wings. The fold should go from the head of the butterfly to the average height of the wing. The layout of the folds can vary to change the size of the upper and lower wings. Make the lower wings: The valley fold down the lower wings so that the upper wings swing upwards. Make the crease stretch from the butterfly's head to the medium length of the lower wing. The location of the folds can vary. Money Eds Butterfly is done! Please note that you can change the location of the wing and chest folds. The butterfly on the left was folded at the halfway mark at all stages. The butterfly on the right was folded so the creases were not quite in the middle. It gives a slightly different look. The butterfly is predominantly green if you start with the black side if the bill is face up. If you start with the green side face up, the butterfly will be black and white with a stain Still quite nice. Nice. The origami dollar butterfly bill is called a Money Twist Bow tie butterfly because it requires something to tie the two pieces together: something like a twist tie or floral wire. The design was inspired by the photo on this Flickr site, but it's probably a traditional model. He uses two $1 bills and a twist tie. Twist tie is a thin metal, covered with paper or plastic. It is flexible and is often used to keep bags closed. You can also use a pipe cleaner or rubber band. Everything is flexible and can fasten things together will work.
