Google search is full of dozens of smart little games and tools, and chances are you'll never find all of them. However, the company recently launched a new one you may be interested in trying out, Word Coach. Word Coach was recently added to a Google search exclusively on a mobile phone. This game pops up whenever you're looking for a dictionary of definitions, or when searching Google Word Coach from your device. The game pops up in Chrome as well as in the Google app (via Android Police). This game tests your vocabulary through an ongoing test. Each round consists of 5 questions that stem from the word you searched on Google if that's how you got access to the game. It also seems to pull away from the words that you previously Googled. As you finish the rounds, you continue to line up. This looks like a fun way to pass the time, but there are some drawbacks. On the one hand, it's not living for everyone just yet. In our testing on both Android and iOS, the game just doesn't show for me as well as other 9to5 employees. Obviously it's still rolling out. Also, the game doesn't seem to save your score as you progress, meaning you start from scratch every time you open it. Also, it's mobile only, so you won't be able to try it on your computer. Overall though, if you have access, it definitely looks like a fun game that trains your vocabulary as you play. This new Word Coach addition can count a bit like both: it's informative, but it's also designed as a game, already has a dictionary/thesaurus that appears in search results when you're looking for a word meaning or define a word, and it's been recently updated with a search box and history. Word Coach complements it and starts to pop up dictionary card with a small test of 5 questions, which first relates directly to the word you were looking for, then extends a little to other words. However, you can also call Word Coach directly into the Google or Chrome app on your phone, by searching Google word coach, or simply, the word trainer. Some questions are synonymous, others are antonyms, and some use images. There are always 2 options to choose from and at the end of 5 questions, you get a bit of a score card with explanations for each of the answers. There's also the next round of the button to continue another test. If you answer a couple of rounds without making any mistakes, you can get the card to align. I did this several times until I started getting words like caring that are at the very limit of my expanding English as a third language dictionary. SAT memories are guaranteed. The main drawback of this educational game/test is that it doesn't seem to remember your score. If you close the search and try it again, you will return to 0 and have to align from the beginning. Word Coach now has its own home screen icon. Look for a badge with your phone and arrow in the bottom left corner of the Word Coach card. Once you hit it, you'll get a nice icon you can place anywhere on your home screen. Thank you, Munit!
