The comma is used before the connection to reduce the position. The three common connections are both, but also. Or, from words, if and if you don't fill the gap in each sentence below. Choose the right word to complete each sentence. Use one of the coordination links above to complete each sentence. Use each word only once. Highlight each independent clause in the proposals below. Whether a circle is used to show consent, disagreement, or cause. Tell me if each connection is used below to show consent, disagreement, or reason. On a separate sheet of paper, join each set of independent provisions to create a complex sentence. Use a coordinating bundle. Subordination of compounds like this, if, if that is why, indicates cause and effect. Complete each sentence below with the correct subordinated connection. Read each sentence below. Determine whether the sentences are filled with a coordination connection (C) or a subordinated joint (S). Write C or S on a line next to the offer. Use a subordinate connection to combine each pair of sentences. Write your new offer on the line below. Highlight the connections in the sentences below. Then determine what the connection is. Choose the word that best completes each sentence. Read each sentence. Emphasize the connections in each sentence. On the line, write whether it is in coordination, submission, or correlated form. Rewrite the paragraph below using coordination, subordination, and correlated connections to combine sentences. Subordinated connections are like after, before, when, so, by, and once indicate when something in the sentence is made or will happen. Use the subordinate connections listed to join the sentences below. You can change, rearrange or omit words as needed to clearly convey the meaning of your sentence of the Words Connection that join. There are two types of connections: subordination and coordination of connections. Coordination connections are more universal. They can be used to attach words, phrases and provisions. On the other hand, subordinated connections combine only reservations. In fact, they don't join reservations, say. Rather, they subordinate provisions, making the provision completely dependent on an independent provision to express a full thought. If this explanation is confusing, you can start by reading this: the structure of the sentence. This page has a collection of sheets and actions that I've created about connections. These materials cover the coordination and subordination of the compounds individually. At the end of the device is a test that covers both. I hope this will help you achieve your goals.
