In the history of the Lacoste brand, it works one hundred percent. Rene Lacoste was born in Paris in 1904 in the family of a wealthy entrepreneur. His father recommended that he play sports, and his father gave him a choice of several elite disciplines. Renee chose tennis, announcing that he would become a champion. He fulfilled his promise by winning Wimbledon and the US Open several times. In 1926, he appeared in the final of the French Open in a T-shirt that did not resemble the outfit of the then tennis players. It was made of cotton, had a soft collar and short sleeves. He sparked big protests because tennis, as a sport for gentlemen, could not expose bare forearms. Speaking in a T-shirt of his own design - he won. The interest in the invention was so huge that Rene Lacoste and his friend decided to start production earlier than someone else competed. The brand was in 1933 and released 300,000,000 white T-shirts. The world-famous crocodile - the brand's logo - came from the nickname Renee, which was supposed to symbolize his bravery. In 1923, Lacoste was appointed to the French national team, and in 1926-1927 he won the title of the first rocket in the world. He also went down in history as an inventor, it is his idea that a tennis ball launcher is used to this day. Rene Lacoste is not sedging - he was a titan of work, trained more often and more often than others. The nickname Alligator, given because of the characteristic folder of reptile skin, quickly stuck on Lacoste, because it reflected his stubbornness and stubbornness on the court. In 1926, Lacoste caused a scandal in the field of fashion and sports, appearing at the World Championships in a white cotton T-shirt with short sleeves, which he designed. At that time, long sleeves, long-legged trousers and unsnicked materials reigned on the courts. The Lacoste project caused a great sensation and forever changed the sports fashion, initiating the style of tennis players, which we look today on the courts. The small green alligator will always be associated with The French, Sporty Lacoste chic. The unique style will be appreciated by all lovers of comfort and moderate elegance.
