Australian Stock Horse Horse A Breed standard Australian Stock Horse SocietyEquus ferus caballus The Australian Stock Horse (or Stockhorse), is especially bred for Australian conditions. This is a tough kind of horse noted for its endurance, agility, and good temperament. His origins date back to the arrival of the first horses in Australia, which were brought from Europe, Africa and Asia. It is used today in a wide variety of disciplines and is still valued as a working horse stockmen and stockwomen across Australia. History The roots of the Australian Stock Horse date back to the earliest imports of nine horses into Australia, with the arrival of the first fleet at Botany Bay in January, 1788. [1] The original horse breeds of early importation included thoroughbred, cape of good hope horse (largely barb and spanish horse), arabic, timor pony and welsh mountain pony. [2] In Australia, horses were bred because of their stamina and power, weaker animals were scrapped, and only the strongest could reproduce. In the 1830s, additional thoroughbred was imported into Australia to improve local tribes, and in the early 20th century, the 20th century was a time of resibreak. The Australian Store Horse and the Waler horse come from similar roots, though today they separate breeds. A állomás ló, hogy volt egy őse mindkét fajta használta az ausztrál hadsereg az első világháborúban, és híres volt a szívósság és kitartás. [3] However, the modern Australian stock horse differs from the Horse that it's not that big. The horses were transported abroad to fight in the war and were kept at home to be bred as Walers were the bigger animals as they had to carry the rider with significant extra weight on their weapons and overall pack. Some of the heaviest animals were also claimed by water carts and carriages. However, the characteristics of toughness and perseverance remain with the Australian Store Horse of today. Official recognition of Australian stock horses as a separate breed began in June 1971, when more than 100 campers and horse breeders met in Tamworth, New South Wales, to form the Australian Stock Horse Society. Many of these people bred herd horses using bloodlines to trace back to their native herd, as well as some Arabic, thoroughbreds, and some ponies with outstanding merits. Most of the early ASH registrations were for horses bred from colonial herds: Saladin, Cecil and his son Radium, Medlow and Bobbie Bruce. The others were thoroughbred: Rivoli, Commandant, Panzer, Midstream, Young Valais, Gibbergunyah, Bushfire, Silvius and Deo Juvante also exerted considerable influence. [2] Since then rivoli ray, blue moon mystic, eliotts creek cadet, Warrenbri Romeo, and some American quarter horses have had a big impact on the breed. The use of Quarter Horse bloodlines is somewhat controversial, with some breeders preferring to stay on older lines. Those who want to have external blood are required to pay very high fees to society, thus encouraging breeders to just make their worthwhile horses. [2] Features An Australian Stock Horse The Australian Stock Horse is bred for intelligence, courage, toughness, and stamina. The horse will be healthy, mobile and quick moving with a safe-footed walk. It will be a calm, sensitive temperament. All colors are acceptable. Height ranges from 14-16.2 hands (56-66 inches, 142-168 cm). The ideal Australian Stock Horse is well proportional in all respects according to its size. The desired features include a finely cut, expressive head with large eyes and a wide forehead. The neck is long and curved, the head is well adjusted. The derescrated are well defined. Complete conformation is well muscular, but not bulky, correct which includes a deep chest, well sprung ribs, strong and wide back, and strong hind quarters. The paths are tough and well adapted. Breed today An Australian Store Horse race in the event around 190,000 Australian Store Horses is registered or foals recorded with the Australian Stock Horse Society. [3] Stock Horse is used in many racing areas, including t-shirts, polo crosses, dressage, camping, show jumping, uneventfulness and endurance. It is also used for stockman challenges, Pony Club activities, general hacking, and stock work at cattle stations. While horses are now often being replaced in flatter Outback and Top End by motorcycles and helicopters, they still needed today for gathering (roundups) in rugged mountain terrain. Public performances in Tribute to the Australian Stock Horse took place at the 2000 Sydney Olympics opening ceremony when an Australian Stock Horse was brought up, followed by another 120 Stock Horses rode into the stadium and performed elaborate manoeuvres of music in the specially written Olympics version of the main theme of the film The Man from Snowy River by Australian composer Bruce Rowland. [summons required] The Australian Stock Horse Crown Act represented Australia in the World Cup and Olympic dressage competition. [Summons required] In March 2008, the Australian Outback Spectacular used 42 Australian stock horses at its Gold Coast exhibition in Queensland, 31 of which were used on a rotating basis in a show.
