It always helps to know your material before you set out to record it. Speak slowly. Set a pace that seems almost unnaturally slow to you. Pause. Take breaks between sentences and paragraphs. Generalized. Treasures every syllable. Modulate. Never forget, Ferris Bueller. In 1930, the Republican-controlled House of Representatives, in an attempt to mitigate the effects of ... Any? Any?... The Great Depression, passed ... Any? Any? A tariff bill? The Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act? Monotons are evil. Bring life and vitality to your reading. As the audiobook Librivox applications for vineyard development in the UK grew by 40% last year, and it's no surprise how, thanks to climate warming and chalk soil, southern England is the perfect place to produce sparkling wine. British vineyards are attracting attention from some major international names too, such as the esteemed French champagne house Tattinger, which snaps up 170 acres of farmland in Kent. Moreover, English sparkling wine has recently been rated by experts in Paris for taste and quality higher than classic French champagne. Oh la la! Getty Images This conclusion was reached after a group of Parisian restaurateurs put English sparkling wines against French champagne in a blind taste test. English wine was the bubbly choice in the two categories, and in the third, the opinion was divided right in the middle. Among the winners was Briton Gasbourne Rose, who went up against N.W. Ayala Rosa Majeur of Champagne. Nine of the 14 tasters preferred British fizz, and half thought it was champagne. English 2009 Nyetimber Blanc de Blanc is also considered a sparkling success. Ben Walgate, CEO of Gusbourne Estate (winning vineyard in Kent) said: I believe that English wine has a very bright future, not only in the UK but also abroad. And the owner and chief executive officer, Eric Heerema, said he noticed the potential of English sparkling wine about a decade ago: I was convinced that English sparkling wine was the future, because outside of Champagne, there are only a few places around the world that have the potential to produce the very best sparkling wines, he said. Figures show that over the past 10 years, English vineyards have grown by an average of 11% a year. If this trend continues, the land under the vine in England and Wales will double in the next seven years. Getty Images Sparkling Wine accounts for 66% of all wine produced in the UK, and most of the recent plantings are made In fact, British sparkling wine producers are so confident in the quality of their wines that they hope to move on from 250,000 to 250,000 2.5 million bottles sold by 2020. Now it's a lot of fizz. UK retailers are also cottoning on the trend and, earlier this week, MHS announced it will double its range of English wines ahead of English Wine Week (May 28 - June 5).) this comes just a week after Waitrose added 12 new English sparkling wines to its shelves. British winemaker Matthew Jukes said: I've watched the English sparkling wine scene grow over the last 30 years, but something has happened in the last three or four years. The only way up, they just get better and better. We have ideal conditions and the perfect ground for the production of great wine. We're going to drink to that! But it is the talent of the winemaker Mitch Cosentino and the consistent performance of his ragweed in the palette that are the true cause of c1/2!1/2br. Dedicated to punch-cap fermentation - repeatedly re-merging by hand grape matter that surfaces to ensure perfect taste and color - Mitch's methodical approach to his craft began modestly in Modesto in 1980 and received early awards. His victorious Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc and Merlot-Poet (vintage 1986) - was the first official merit from the United States. Mitch's growing reputation parallels with the expansion as his winery (starting with the transition to Napa Napa 1989) and his own creative expression. His work currently includes 5 wineries and more than 50 wines from 15 varieties. I don't eat just one type of food. so why would I make just one type of wine? This is Mitch. Tasting rooms at cosentino Winery in Yountville and Lodi roll out the red carpet for fans wanting to enjoy precious moments with the famed M. Coz, an exceptional ensemble of elite Napa grapes awarded double gold for three years at the San Francisco International Wine Come-ition, and zin, the great lady of this variety, who takes his brilliant direction from the nearly century-old vine. And in the category of famous collaboration, Mitch and basketball luminary Larry Bird hold a trial with Legends - an outstanding squad of Cabernet Sauvignon, Merit, Merlot, and Chardonnay. With such an A-list lineup, it's no surprise that the Cannes Film Festival has shown a selection of Cosentino's wine credits as official wine for its American pavilion - and rave reviews. The Cosentino winery certainly deserves its heritage in the spotlight. Of course it will do. I'm a fan - I would recommend. Amazing! I love it! Thanks for your ranking! Spent last night in the backyard, sitting in perfect weather, the dog at my feet, and reading Jim Wendler 5-3-1 for a powerlifting book. Jim's book is not only a huge tutorial, but a fun read. Get you pumped to get strong. Worth reading in for his North Wag article on how to train to avoid feminization. It's a book for real men lifting up. Check it out. However, however, Guys are taking training to the point of being too hardcore. There's hard preparation and silly training. And that's why I believe we'll see Death hardcore, home-school chain in the next couple of years. My thoughts here: the death of county training? By the way, Jim's book isn't just a huge book I'm reading, I'm also halfway through a wonderful book of short essays about what's really important in life. It's called Wealth, Alexander Green. In one chapter, Green refers to this quote, which I really liked: Ask yourself these 3 questions every night: What have I done? Where did I let myself down? What responsibility did I not fulfill? - Pythagoras And, finally, today's Independence Council: Trust is what needs to be built up, protected, evaluated, carefully and carefully preserved. It's one thing that changes everything. Alexander Green, in Beyond Wealth... When you make a promise, OVER-delivery. A very simple rule of success.
