History: The horror spread across three nations as one by one members of their ruling families began to disappear. Peoples, absorbed in nature, tried to solve problems diplomatically, offering each other help and apologies. However, these envoys never achieved their targets, killed on the way. Each province assumed that it was an act of hostility on the part of the other - a clear admission of guilt for the abductions - and three of them entered the fray. By interrogating the prisoners they had taken that day, they realized that something was wrong, that far from killing their messengers, the nations from which they were now fighting, were as eager for peace as they were. But it was too late, blood was spilled, the territories were seized: the victors could not let go of their position of power, and the losers wanted revenge. This was how the wars continued, even when they realized that the conflict was orchestrated by someone else, someone who wanted them to be weakened, someone with a terrible and incomprehensible purpose. They fought and did not give in because they did not want to face what was to come when the war was over. Carnifair is a nation dominated by an artificial and gratuitous system of government. Huge beasts pursue their lands, endlessly attacking the villages of the province. To protect them, these settlements hire a hero from the central guild, playing them to protect them. Little did they know that it is the guild itself that create these monsters, desperate to ensure that their income and dominance in society remains unchanged, even at the expense of the progress of their nation and the lives of their people. Urbz is a city in constant motion. Not all over the land like the legendary desert tribes, but down. The land on which the city was built initially seemed solid, but as the capital grew larger and larger, it began to slowly sink. Its inhabitants did not want to leave the city of his birth and the favorable place that he occupied, so they built desperately, trying to get ahead of the rising land. Over the years they have become a nation dedicated to this single goal, architects oversee building day and night while breadwinners swarm throughout their territory collecting the necessary resources. Stema - Many years ago a man was born. A man who saw in himself the potential is too huge for any life. Clouded by the thousands of opportunities he saw, he killed himself, turning his dead body into a production line, giving birth to endless copies of himself. These clones, proceeded to realize the potential he saw, all teaching himself in different things, changing their environment to open up new opportunities. They race fiercely unified and at the same time divide, all the same person, but each of them holds something different. The evolution of the system in the collection of war we imagine a detailed system of branching evolution. You will have the choice of taking creatures in many different directions. Don't believe me. Check it out! We'll go into more detail about each being as we progress! And these are just ordinary creatures. Not a kingdom of specific creatures or heroes!
