This PDF is available from the Internet for good faith and education purposes. The main figures in any D'D campaign are characters created by players. Heroism, stupidity, righteousness and potential villainy of your characters are at the heart of the story. This chapter presents a variety of new options for them, with an emphasis on additional subclasses for each of the classes in the player's manual.Each class offers a character-defining choice at the 1st, 2nd or 3rd level, which opens up a number of special features that are not available to the class as a whole. This choice is called a subclass. Each class has a collective term described by its subclasses; in a fighter, for example, subclasses are called combat archetypes, and in paladin - sacred oaths. The table below shows each of the subclasses in this book. In addition, the Druid section provides information on how Wild Shape works, and the sorcerer receives a collection of new options for the Eldritch Invocations class feature. Each of the class presentations leads with tips on how to add depth and detail to your character's personality. You can use the tables in these sections as a source of inspiration, or roll to die to randomly determine the outcome if desired. Following the subclasses, a section called This Is Your Life presents a series of tables to add details to your character's backstory. The chapter concludes with a selection of feats for racing in the Handbook suggesting ways to delve into racial race The Subclass Level Affordable Description dominate the battlefield of the Barbarian I witnessed the indomitable performance of the barbarians on the battlefield and it makes me wonder what kind of strength underlies their fury. - Seret, archwizard Anger, felt by a normal person, resembles the fury of a barbarian just as a light breeze akin to a violent thunderstorm. The driving force of the barbarian is a place that goes beyond simple emotions, which makes its manifestation even more terrible. Whether it's the impulse for rage comes entirely from within or from forging a connection with the spirit of the animal, a raging barbarian becomes able to perform supernatural feats of strength and endurance. The flash is temporary, but while it lasts, it takes over the body and mind, driving the barbarian despite the danger and injury until the last enemy falls. It can be tempting to play a barbaric character that is a simple application of the classic archetype - a rude, and usually dimwitted one on someone who rushes to where others are afraid to tread. But not all the barbarians in the world are cut from this cloth, so you can certainly put your own spin on things. Either way, consider adding some flourishes to make your barbarian stand out from all the others; See the following sections for some ideas. Roar! I'm very angry! Funny, I don't feel any stronger. Maybe because I'm always angry, I'm always in good condition. Stands to the mind. Personal TotemsBarbarians tend to travel to the light, inking little in the way of personal belongings or other unnecessary gear. The few things they carry often include small items that have a special meaning. A personal totem is important because it has a mystical origin or is associated with an important moment in the character's life - perhaps a memory from the barbarian's past or a harbinger of what lies ahead. A personal totem of this kind may be associated with the spirit of an animal barbarian, or may in fact be a totem object for an animal, but such a connection is not essential. Anyone who has a totem bear spirit, for example, can still carry an eagle feather like a personal totem. Consider creating one or more personal totems for your character , objects that have a special connection with your character's past or future. Think about how the totem can affect the actions of your character Personal Totem d6 Totem 1 A bunch of fur from a lone wolf that you befriended during the hunt2 Three eagles, given to you by a wise shaman who told you that they would play a role in determining your fate3 necklace of the claws of a young cave bear that you slewhanded as a baby4 Holding three stones that represent your ancestors5 a few small bones from the first beast you killed, tied together with colored wool Tattoos Members of many clans adorned with decorate body with tattoos, each of which represents an important moment in the life of the bearer or the ancestor of the carrier, or which symbolizes feeling or attitude. As with personal totems, the barbarian's tattoos may or may not be related to the animal spirit. Each tattoo of a barbaric display contributes to the identity of this person. If your character wears tattoos, how do they look and what do they represent? Tattoos d6 Tattoo 1 Eagle Wings are widespread throughout the upper back.2 Engraved on the backs of the hands of the paws of the cave bear.3 Symbols of your clan are displayed in wine patterns along your arms.4 Elk horns are inked across your back.5 Images of your spirit animals tattooed along your arms and hands. 6 Wolf eyes are marked on your back to help you see and ward off evil spirits. The superstitions of the Barbaras vary greatly in the way they understand life. Some follow the gods and seek guidance from those deities in the cycles of nature and animals they meet. These barbarians believe that spirits inhabit the plants and animals of the world, and the barbarians look at them for omens and power. Other barbarians trust only the blood that flows in their veins and the steel they hold in their hands. They have no use for the invisible world, instead of relying on their feelings to hunt and survive like the wild beasts they imitate. Both of these relationships can lead to superstitions. These beliefs are often passed down in the family or shared between members of a clan or hunting group. If your barbaric character has any superstitions, have they been ingrained in you by your family, or are they the result of personal experience? Superstition d6 Superstition1 If you break the bones of the dead, you inherit all the troubles that haunt them in life.2 Never trust a wizard. They are all devils in disguise, especially the friendly ones of the 3 dwarves have lost their spirits, and almost like the undead. That's why they live underground. 4 Magical things bring trouble. Never sleep with a magical object ten feet away from you.5 When you walk through the cemetery, be sure to wear silver, or a ghost can jump into your body. 6 If an elf looks you in the eye, she tries to scour your mind.
