Yes, you should be required to create it first because this account is really very important, not just for the business of downloading apps only. How important is that? Um, I'll explain below. Relax, no need to worry about turning on your computer or laptop because we can create a Gmail account directly from your phone or android tablet. Well, for those of you who may not know how yet, you should read this post to the end, because here I will give you a short tutorial to create a new Google email. And here are the steps that you can follow: NOTE : Please read carefully, I'm one. Open the Gmail app on your device. If you're not really into signing up for the gadget you're using, then you'll jump right to step number 4. However, if you've already signed up and want to create a new Gmail, this app will open your inbox from your email. Click on the icon of the three folded lines (I don't know what it's called) located in the top left top left of the screen, as seen in the picture below. The app will display several menu options, menus, and click Settings or Settings menus. 2. There will be a generic customization option as well as a list of Google accounts you use on the device you are using. Choose an Add account. 3. There will be an email menu setting. Select Google and then click Next. 4. Well now, you can add the Google account you have. But, since here we are going to create a new one, then you have to choose I Create a new account, as shown in the picture below. 5. The app will display a new account registration menu. In the first step (pictured below) you will be asked to enter your names. Remember, just type in your name, don't enter your ex's name, so you don't fail to move on. Then click Next. You will then be asked to enter the email username you will create. This username will also be your email address, for example, if you fill out this username with namamantan2, then later your email address will be namamantan2@gmail.com. Do you understand? Okay, please fill in and click Next. 6. Now enter the password to protect this email account you will create. Be sure to create a password that is hard for others to guess, so it's not easy to crack, but also make sure it's easy to remember yourself so as not to forget the password. If you already have, click Next. READ MORE : Tips for creating strong passwords so you can't easily break down into 7. After that, you will be asked to enter the phone number that you have. In fact this extra alias can be done, and can't be. But it will be safer if you fill out the phone number form at this stage, because it will be useful if one day you forget your password. Make sure you enter the correct country code (for Indonesia, select ID) as shown in the picture above, then enter the hapemu number and click Next. But if you don't want to enter a hapemu number, you can click skip the menu to continue. 8. If you enter the hapemu number, the pop-up menu will be a pop-up that will re-display the number you entered earlier. Check back and if you are sure to click Check to continue, then Google will send you an SMS with the code to make sure that the number you entered is valid. Enter the code sent via SMS in the form of a Gmail account. But, if it turns out that the number you entered is currently being used on the same device (as you are currently using to register on Gmail), then the check will be done automatically and the app will move on to the next step. 9. Almost done! You will now be asked to accept the terms and policies that must be followed in order to continue using Gmail services. You click to read it first, first, You can click I agree right away. 10. The app will then re-display memories from a former email address that you entered earlier to confirm. It is reported that the account will be used for various services from Google including Google PlayStore, Youtube, Google Maps, Drive, etc. Click Next to continue. 11. Last step, you will be asked if you want to get the latest news updates from Google, as well as the latest offers from Google PlayStore. Click on and the app will register the email plus the data you entered earlier to activate the new Gmail account you want to create. Finished! Now you've successfully created a new Gmail email account. It's long enough, but it's not that hard, is it?
