The rehabilitation singer, who divorced Blake Fielder Sybille last July, inks the word break and pocket design on his mind. Now celebrity tattoo artist Henry Hate has revealed that the singer has been in talks with him for months about covering it with a new design. Hate said the wine house was not emotional about removing her ex-husband's name. He said: I don't say she's upset about it, but she's the one who raised the tattoo issue and I didn't ask her what her reason is. I imagined that's why they're obvious and that she wants some kind of closure and wants to move on. She was like, 'I need to go.' The winehouse discussed plans to cover tattoos made by another tattoo a month after she first began dating Fielder Sybille in 2005, with a design first stolen in the form of leopards, lions or palomitas (doves). Hate said she came to discuss this idea last year, but added: 'I think it was brewed for a while. She was thinking of covering it with steals, the idea was swimming in her head, so I drew some sketches for her to see. Hate rejected a report that the wine house was planning to get rid of tattoos with laser surgery. He said: She wanted to cover it, but I said it would take time for the technology to cover things like that, with retarding and words. She didn't want flowers, she was adamant about it. She wanted something to get rid of it, and maybe bleeding into a shawl and wrapping it around her shoulder. That was her suggestion. "She's very direct to what she wants, so I just giveAnd she said, Yes, I like this. No, I don't like it. All I have to do is give her what she wants. Hate, who owns a London tattoo parlor prick, said it would take 12-13 hours to carry out the design the winehouse had in its thoughts, but he was not sure when her next appointment would be. He said: She's getting better now. When she comes in, I usually receive a text message from her. Or she comes in when the client is perfectly aligned together, and I happen to be free. Or she said to me, I'll come, can you fit me today? She is a very real person and she is a lovely girl. I don't have a bad word about her. Meanwhile, Hate, a client of other celebrities such as Alexander McQueen, Pete Dohati, Franz Ferdinand's Paul Thomson and the ordinary boy Preston, will create what is claimed to be the world's first ice tattoo next month. He etched his design, using Japanese samurai nomi, which is a traditional tattoo method used in the Far East, the Nissan Cube car tattooed into a huge ice block frozen inside. His other designs are more permanent, but this tattoo will melt within about three days. Hate said: There are a lot of people who have the perception that you get a tattoo, and you always remember, but I think it's a vision and the process of creating it with your artist. There are times when you actually forget that it is actually on you. Once out there, I have to let it go, and the visuals will still burn memories on the people who see it. It's still going to last. In the end, it only changes the direction of recognition of what the actual tattoo is. Just because you don't have it doesn't mean you can't appreciate the job, and it doesn't take much time to create it. Hate's creation will be announced at London's South Bank to celebrate the launch of the Nissan Cube at 9 a.m. on February 9. 9:00 a.m.
