Accessibility Resource Center Skip to main content Verizon has released a new update to its V CAST Music app that finally brings MP3s, ringtones and ringback tones under the same roof. Especially MP3s will come without DRM and in high quality. Other new added features include a wish list for storing songs for later purchase and the ability to send a song recommendation to friends, which will open a page to buy a song in the app. Verizon notes that some of their Android offerings come with a preinstalled app, while others can simply go to Verizon's Android marketplace section and find the app there. While mp3s are competitively priced at either $.99 or $1.29, ringback tones will bring you back $1.99, and ringtones are a staggering $2.99. So while you can pay about $4 for one MP3 and its ringtone, you can decide to save a little money and make a ringtone or notification sound yourself from any MP3 right on your phone. We'll leave the choice up to you. Full press release after the break. AR Tetradrachm (17.04 g, 11h). Pella or amphipolis mint. Struck about 220-211 BC. Diademed head right / BASILEWS FILIPPOU, Athena Alkidemos advances left, preparing to throw a thunderbolt held in her right hand; monograms to the inner left and right sides. Mamroth, Philip 1, pl. 5, 1 (same obv. die); SNG Alpha Bank 1049; SNG Munich 1124; SNG Saroglos 934 (same obv. die); McClean 3628 ( same obv. die). EF, light gray tone, with a slight golden hue around the device. A rare first Philip desecates a number. From the Semon Lipcer Collection. Philip V was the son of Macedonian King Demetrios II Aitolikos. He was only nine years old at the time of his father's death in 239 BC, so the kingdom passed to his cousin Antigonos III Doson, who ruled until 221 BC. Philip's entire reign was dedicated to maintaining macedon supremacy in Greece, which inevitably put the kingdom at odds with Rome, whose power in Greece was ascendant. Two major wars followed, the First and Second Macedonian Wars, the latter culminating in the overwhelming defeat of macedonians at the Battle of Cynocephalae in 1970. Although Philip retained his kingdom, Macedon's influence diminished considerably, and Greece moved into the sphere of Rome. This tetradrachm is from Philip's first series of silver coins, and shows the first Macedonian royal portrait since the question of his great-grandfather Demetrios I Poliorketes in 290s BC. Although the style of portraits in the Macedonian coin has traditionally been sub-paired compared to those in Smaller Asia, these portraits of Philip are among the most beautiful Hellenistic portraits, apparently engraved by a celator master. In reverse is Athena Alkidemos, who was the traditional reverse type used on his grandfather's tetradrachms, Antigonos II Gonatas. This first batch of tetradrahm was hit with the attic standard, and was replaced with a new coin in 211. Although this first series dates back to a period of nine years, it was most likely a very short question (only three death obvse are known) affected during the Social War (220-217 BC). Kr.) (see EHC, page 135). CNGTriton11, 131 King George V Fountain - 11 May 2012 Evening Light can bring joy or frustration to the photographer. It can cast soft, golden tones over the theme or, as here, shadows that inevitably reduce composition. In the interests of completeness, having photographed the better-lit 'obverse', I decided to publish King George V's fountain, Narrow Quay, Bristol.
