Many Android games depend on mobile data connectivity. Whether it's downloading stuff from a server like Clash of Clans, or using it to protect DRM like most Final Fantasy games, it seems that virtually every game asks you to be in close proximity to a web connection just to make the game work. Not everyone has that luxury so here are ten of the best offline Android games that don't require WiFi at all. If none of them sails your boat, Google Play has a list for standalone games for your convenience. These include some modern games like Subway Surfers and classics like Fruit Ninja. Here are some of the best Android games that don't require WiFi or mobile data connection!

Alto's OdysseyPrice: Free to Play
Odyssey Alto is one of the new offline games that doesn't require WiFi. It's an endless runner with a side scroll. You ski on different slopes, make various jumps and collect a bunch of coins. Coins unlock customization items in the game store. You'll also get colorful, good-looking graphics. They won't win any awards for realism, but they sure are nice to watch. The mechanics are simple enough. You move forward on your own. The only control of the player are jumping and doing somersaults in the air. The game is free with advertising. You can pay to remove ads or buy coins to unlock customization items. This is one of the most popular offline Android games.

Bloons TD 6Price: $4.99 with in-app purchases
Bloons TD 6 is the latest participant in the classic tower defense franchise. He plays the same way as his predecessors. You have created towers along the road and defeat the bad guys as they approach. The game includes 20 maps, five levels of upgrades, heroes and 19 towers with three upgrade paths each. You will also get a rich meta with lots of individual tower upgrades for certain situations. Finally, players get a few difficulties and several different modes of play. Of course, the game can be played offline. It works for $4.99 with some extra (and optional) in-app purchases. It's easily one of the two best tower defense releases from 2018.

CrashlandsPrice: $4.99
Crashlands is one of the best offline Android games ever. You end up on the planet without a path. The goal is to build a base, defeat the main bad guy, and craft various items to get out. It comes with a simple, fun combat system. There is also a self-management inventory, tons of material for craft, and tongue-in-cheek humor that keeps the atmosphere light and blunt. There is also cloud saving support, offline gaming and controller support. That's $4.99 without in-app purchases.

Crossy RoadPrice: Free
Road is one of the most popular mobile games. It's basically a Frogger generation of mobile gaming. You guide the chicken across the road, streams and around various obstacles. The game features more than 150 collectible characters, local and online multiplayer (when Play online anyway), offline support, Android TV support, and more. This is a family game that is free to play. Shopping in the app is mainly for cosmetic things that do not affect the game.

EterniumPrice: Free to play
Eternium is one of the few freerides RPGs that does not require an Internet connection. This is an RPG action. You run around, sling magic, kill bad guys, and explore various ruins and dungeons. Of course, you'll also get a storyline, tons of loot to collect, and lots of things to do. It plays like most mobile RPG actions. However, you don't need to connect to the server to play anything. You have to make sure that the latest content is downloaded, however. Otherwise, the game may not function as expected. It's a freemium game, but it's not aggressively so. This is one of the most successful actions of RPGs on a mobile phone for a reason.

Friday 13thPrice: Free with the app purchase
Friday 13th is a horror-puzzle game with a ton of blood and fun room. You play like Jason Vorhees and you are slaughtering your way through more than 100 levels. You have to kill all the people while avoiding cops, traps, mines, and, oddly enough, rotary phones. This is a fun action arcade style experience with some horror and gore elements. We definitely don't recommend this for kids, but you can play offline and it's a good game.

GRID AutosportPrice: $9.99
GRID Autosport is one of the newest racing games and has autonomous support. In addition, it has full controller support, a metric ton of content to unlock, and a ton of races to play through. The game presents it with full port versions of PlayStation 3 and Xbox 360 with all DLC included for the $9.99 price tag. You also get a bunch of race types, great graphics, and above average games. There isn't much wrong with this and it's one of the few good racing games for mobile devices with controller support as well as offline support.

Kingdom Of Venge RushancePrice: $4.99 with in-app purchases
Kingdom Rush Revenge is another outstanding tower defense game from 2018. This is the last game in the popular Kingdom Rush series, and it plays like its predecessors. You have created towers and heroes along the way to defeat all the bad guys. The game includes a bunch of towers, 16 stages, 35 bad guys, 30 upgrades and more than 50 achievements. Yes, it also plays offline if you need it. The base game goes for $4.99. There are additional in-app purchases for items that will help you win different matches. There is no online multiplayer mode though, so it doesn't pay for the win. This is an exceptionally challenging task, however.

NBA JamPrice: $4.99
NBA Jam is probably the best arcade sports game right now. It has two-on-two. The rules are pretty relaxed as well. The team wins from the highest point at the end of the game. The graphics are not surprising, but they are passable. Mechanics are basically arcade style. So they are simple enough for a good mobile experience. It has local and online multiplayer, controller support, and more. The game also has a campaign mode to play through. You even get Android TV support with hardware controller support. There is a lot here for $4.99. It also has no in-app purchases.

MinecraftPrice: $6.99 with in-app purchases
Minecraft may not have a storyline, but if you want the biggest bang for your buck, then it's probably this game. You can create whole worlds and play them offline either in creative mode or survival where you can build things, my stuff, kill the bad guys, and do just about anything you want. It's not as big and exciting as the computer version, but the developers have been closing the gap by adding things like Redstone to a more unique building. That's $6.99 with in-app purchases. Additional purchases for skin players. Those who love the idea of Minecraft but want a different experience. Terraria is also an offline game with similar mechanics.

Pocket CityPrice: Free/$3.99
Pocket City is very similar to Sim City. This is a city-builder sim, which acts basically in the same way. You build roads, buildings, and basically everything else the city needs. Players often deal with good things like sides or bad things like massive fires. You have to make sure that to achieve a good balance in order to make money, level up, unlock more buildings, and unlock more land. The free version contains a basic game with advertising. The premium version adds more features, sandbox mode, and it removes advertising. It's one of the best city-builders on Google Play, and it's not just offline, but doesn't have in-app purchases either. Score!

The quizPrice: Free/$2.99
Kvioid is a simple quiz game that asks you the questions you are attempting to answer. It boasts more than 7,000 questions on several levels. They are planning to add more. It also has over a dozen categories, three game modes, and various hints in the game to help you figure out the answer. As it follows in this list, you can also play it completely offline. You can grab an extra 3000 questions along with some other perks if you take the pro version of the game. This is one of the best offline Android games for quiz lovers.

Reigns seriesPrice: $2.99-$3.99
Reigns is a franchise of simple card games. You play as a ruler and you get cards. Each card gives you an opportunity. You swipe left to negotiate or swipe right to disagree. The decision you make either takes you back to the next stage or kills you and ends your reign. There are three in the series. The first depicts the king, the second queen, and the game instead of the unnamed ruler depicts the characters of Game of Thrones. You really can't go wrong with any of them. The mechanics are the same in all three games minus some minor differences. All of them can play offline as well and All available for free on Google Play Pass.

The Room seriesPrice: $0.99/$1.99/$3.99/$4.99
Room presents 100 outstanding puzzles. They all have deep puzzles, outstanding graphics and secret plots. The first three games have puzzles scattered across the room. You solve them to avoid the room. The fourth game takes place in the dollhouse and it's a fun little experience. Earlier games are a little shorter, but a few endings in later games help to reproduce the value and length of the game. You can play any of them offline. However, you can't use the cloud saving feature in room 3 and room: Old Sins offline. They are also relatively inexpensive, have no in-app purchases, and have no advertising.

Stardew ValleyPrice: $7.99
Stardew Valley is one of the truly great games of the last few years. It has both autonomous support and controller support if you want these two features. The game presents if we show, that is, a simulator of agriculture with some elements of RPG. You plant things, fish, interact with the local town, and restore your farm to greatness. The charming retro graphics work well for this title, and it strikes all the signs, especially considering it's a PC port. This game is also available for members of Google Play Pass for free.
