Download (Image credit: Rockstar Games) Rockstar's next AAA game will be made entirely in VR, it seems, after the Australian developer leaked information about the upcoming title from GTA and Red Dead Redemption publisher. Posting on LinkedIn, Video Games deluxe shared that she is now preparing for a new project to open the AAA VR world title for Rockstar. 2020 marks our 7th year of work exclusively for Rockstar in Sydney and we are excited to take on this breakthrough project. The studio previously worked with Rockstar on the VR iteration of L.A. Noire (L.A. Noire: The V.R. Case Files) on PC and PSVR, which means we have no reason to doubt the information. With the paucity of details around Rockstar's development plans after Red Dead Redemption 2 (2018), this is the clearest sign yet of the studio's ambitions in years to come. Don't expect that the new IPThe issue is actually what angle Rockstar is going to in the VR game. This certainly won't be GTA 6 - a colloquial name for the as-yet unconfirmed sequel to GTA 5 - given the smaller reach of VR hardware compared to the current generation of consoles. As AAA is the open name of the world, and given previous works of Video Games Deluxe adaptation of Rockstar IP for VR, it is likely that we see existing GTA or Red Dead Redemption games enter the world of virtual reality. Our money is on GTA 5 (2013), given its continued popularity and release on multiple platforms - and it also hints at plans for the next generation of VR console games in PSVR 2, when the new iteration of Sony's VR headset eventually launches on the PS5. So, will players soon be exploring Los Santos's VR headset? Less likely, something happened. PlayStation VR 2: All the latest rumorsvia road to VR The British think tank has revealed in a new study that Rockstar Games appears to have dived taxes in the UK and received millions of pounds in subsidies - the latest claiming at least one of its games, Grand Theft Auto V, to be a British game. Tax Watch UK this week published a report called Game System. He claims through offshoring profits, Rockstar North (core (main GTA V) has not paid any tax in the UK for ten years. Within five years of the release of GTA V, Rockstar and take-two's UK studio company claimed profits of just 47.3 million pounds, while the $3.4 billion bonus pool was distributed among senior staff. So despite the fact that GTA V is the third best-selling game of all time and generated about $6 billion in revenue, the studio that did so apparently saw very little profit - so few that they qualify for tax breaks. Tax Watch believes both companies should have had substantial tax liabilities in the UK. In fact, Rockstar and Take-Two have applied for, and have been granted, about 42 million pounds (approximately $51 million) in tax breaks from the video game tax breaks scheme in the past few years. According to Tax Watch, this particular tax break was designed to be used by smaller, less flash developers who make games that can be considered culturally British. Now let's remember the most famous rockstar game: Grand Theft Auto, sending the American Dream set in the uber-violent satire of New York and California; Red Dead Redemption, Western drama; and Los Angeles Noir, whose settings and cultural influences are right up there in the title. So that makes it culturally British apparently all that needs to be done in order to claim that the name should be developed in the UK - and Rockstar North in Scotland. George Turner, director of Tax Watch, called it an attack on the British taxpayer and added: The tax break for video games was designed to help developers of games with cultural content that will struggle to sell internationally. The fact that such a large amount of help goes to the developers of Grand Theft Auto clearly shows that the relief is not working as intended. Tax Watch recommended a review of the tax credit scheme for video games. Furthermore, while she acknowledges that neither Rockstar nor Take-Two have done anything illegal, she has continued to urge Her Majesty's Tax and Customs to challenge the distribution of profits. The part that I find most amusing is the irony - and I'm going to drop some GTA v SPOILERS on you right now. In Deathwish Ending, the only one that could be called happy, the heroes michael, Franklin, and Trevor avenge their rich, entitled enemy by kidnapping and torturing him. While lecturing him about his many sins, Michael describes the villain offshoring his profits as one of two great evils that overshadow American capitalism. In this case, he uses it as a metaphor for a rich asshole trying to kill him, but still... little on the nose in retrospect.
