The best mobile payment apps make it easy to send payments using your smartphone. Mobile apps that provide contactless payments have become commonplace since the introduction of Near Field Communication (NFC), turning individual smartphones into the equivalent of a payment card. Just like contactless credit and debit cards, however, mobile payments have their limitations - but they also have their fees, and sometimes they're not always so clear. So as mobile apps deliver the promise of a digital wallet, they are changing and expanding the way things are paid for in everyday life. They succeed in small transactions, avoiding the need to have cash, and this can be applied not only to purchase, but also to everyday items. However, like contactless payments, mobile payment apps can also be great for sending money to people you know, such as friends or family, or paying traders directly. As contactless payment platforms continue to roll out, we'll help you choose the right mobile apps and NFC systems that can work for you. Want your company or services to be reviewed for this buyer's management? Please email your desire.athow@futurenet.com to find out with the URL of the buying guide in the subject line. We have also identified the best mobile card payment readers. (Image credit: Apple)visit websiteWorks in iMessageNo app to downloadMore is safe as integrated 2FAApple onlyApple likes to make the complex simple and easy for everyone, and their mobile payment offer, Apple Pay is true to this philosophy. There is no app to download and it works on iPhones, and can be used for online purchases on Macs.The user provides credit card information to his Apple account. The iPhone is then used to purchase using the contactless payment method at a retail establishment, and it is considered safer because the user must verify their identity using the Touch ID or Face ID sensor. Users can also easily send cash to each other via iMessage, or simply by asking Siri, the digital assistant. When you receive cash, it is similar to your Apple Pay Cash balance, which can then be transferred to your bank account. Apple Pay is accepted in about half of U.S. outlets, including popular retailers Starbucks, Walgreens, McDonald's and Best Buy among many others. There is no charge for using a debit card and a credit card charge of 3%. (Image credit: Google) visit websiteWidespread acceptancePreloaded on many Android phonesNeeds different app for personal paymentThe Android mobile payment app Google Pay, which comes with pre-installed Android smartphones. It is accepted in many retail stores including Bloomingdale's, Chick-Fil-A, KFC, Nike and Staples, as well as online services such as Airbnb and DoorDash. It claims to be safer than using a traditional credit card as the card number is not directly directly and protected by layered security encryption. Google Pay supports a number of credit cards from a number of major providers such as Chase, Citi, Discover and American Express. However, that debit card from your tiny credit union with only three affiliates probably won't be on the support list. However, there is a way to directly connect your PayPal account, and all Visa cards are supported through Visa Checkout. Debit card payments are free and loan payments are 2.9%. It's also confusing that in order to be able to send money directly to another user (from person to person transaction), you need another app: Google Pay Send. (Image credit: Samsung) visit websiteHigh degree acceptanceWorks on old magnetic strip terminalsLimited number of supported phones With their market-leading Galaxy phones now common among users, Samsung also now provides its mobile payment application, Samsung Pay. It is supported on several recent Samsung flagship smartphones, such as the Galaxy S9, but not on the phones of other manufacturers, limiting the wider spread. The Samsung Pay app connects to credit and debit cards of a number of major banks. The good thing about Samsung Pay is the almost universal recognition as merchants don't need to opt into the program. Rather, Samsung Pay works with conventional credit card readers using new EMV or NFC technologies, or even old ones using magnetic stripe technology - by holding the phone next to it, credit card information contained in the magnetic stripe gets transmitted using a technology called magnetic secure transmission (MST). With such flexibility in interacting with a credit card reader, Samsung Pay can really replace this bunch of credit cards in your wallet with your phone app. (Image credit: PayPal) visit the websiteFree from person to person transfersExisting ecosystem accounts Not widely acceptedDays in translations It seems that PayPal has been around for eons when it comes to online transactions, and with their mobile app they want to go beyond simply providing seller protection. These days, they want to deliver direct payments from person to person, and besides to get into the shopping area, although you are still more likely to be able to pay online with this service than at the checkout. This is due to the lack of NFC support with the PayPal app, and only a handful of retailers jumping on the bandwagon to take PayPal hampered efforts to date. The downside of PayPal were the fees, which can be complicated and difficult to understand as there are so many of them. At least for buying a product online or in person, PayPal does not charge a fee, and does not charge a transfer fee from the person (without seller protection), so you can send some cash to help split the check. However, when transferring from a related bank account instant transfer from a related debit card is charged for translation. (Image credit: Venmo)visit websiteFree for transactions without credit cardsIncluded to Facebook contactsConsigned acceptance in retail storesVenmo works through a mobile app on your smartphone, and registration can be done with your Facebook account if you prefer. Next, you will link your bank account or credit card. You can then use the app to send or receive money from other Venmo users, or you can send money by phone number or email because the app can access your facebook or phone contacts; and if the recipient is not currently on Venmo, they are asked to create an account. Venmo is more useful for online payments, but some retailers are accepting it, including Forever 21 and Foot Locker. Receiving and sending money are free, but there is a 3% credit card charge.
