Share your movies everywhere: TV, YouTube, Facebook, iPhone, PSP, etc. 10. iMovie HD 6 This program is very old but has many strengths. For beginners, iMovie HD 6 offers a simple video editing kit. This program doesn't offer many advanced options, but it does allow you to learn editing concepts very well. 9. Prism You Can Have in Your certain internet movies that are not compatible with your yours and editing programs. Or, you may find, alas, that even the output format of your camera is not compatible... Prism converts tons of these video file formats, and does it effectively through a conversion package. The quality is fantastic, with very little loss of quality for each format. 8. Motion 5 Motion 5 is a stand-alone program that can be paired with several other applications in order to expand its functionality. This gives you the ability to edit add effects to your photos. At the same time, it allows you to do some 3D animation. 7. Compressor Compressor is the first most specific program on this list, and at the same time, it is also one of the most professional. Priced at $50, you have a large set of editing tools available for each need, but given its specifics this program is not offered to beginners because it can be too complex. Don't forget to watch some tutorials if you decide to try this app. 6. CineFX CineFX is all a beginner might want from a video editor for a Mac. It's free, simple and has a click and drag feature that allows any user, even a beginner, to become an excellent editor. It takes its signal from the open source Jahshaka program, which is an additional guarantee. 5. Hyperengine AV Just like CineFX, Hyperengine AV is free and very easy to use, making it a great program for beginners. However, it has some features that other programs don't have, such as audio splicing and automatic anniversary video. All through the drag and drop interface. If you decide to purchase a license, you will have access to many other features. 4. MediaCalc MediaCalc is a blogger's tool and it's great for a V-blogger out there trying to make a good video for YouTube. This makes editing much more efficient, and should allow you to make the most of your software's free resources. 3. Rezorect Using old movies always means sacrificing a lot of quality in terms of resolution. However, with Rezorect you no longer have to make this compromise, as it is a program designed to improve the quality of these old works of repertoire. It's amazing how he can do it with ease and speed, and that makes it a great program for editors of all kinds. 2. Blender there are probably a hundred different lists that include Blender, and you'll understand why right after downloading (you can do it right away). It has a full set of features that most professional programs already do. It can convert movies and allows you to create animated 3D scripts at a semi-professional level. It's all free and you can find it that way forums that offer add-ons that it is impossible not to find what you need for editing. 1. Autodesk Smoke Is Ok, you can find great quality free programs out there, but even by downloading them all, you won't be able to create something really professional without the right program. Autodesk Smoke is at the top of this list because it offers a complete package with additional content that most free programs can't offer. Needless to say, I'm listing fiction and options since we're talking about a pro program. However, it is also the most expensive program on the list, as its price is about 15,000 euros. Recommended program: Wondershare Filmora (originally Wondershare Video Editor)
