Ooooooooooooooooooooooooooooo. What does it look like to you? A long line of wasps? Yes, it is. But with Weird Type, a new augmented reality app from zack Lieberman and Molmol Kuo that puts words in real space, that Ooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooo is not just a string of letters. This is a 3D tunnel that you can enter like a cave. This is just one of many fun discoveries made by users of the app so far. Weird Type lets you spell out whatever word you want and place it literally where your phone is in space. It's essentially a digital printing stamp that you can post on the world, not your Instagram stories. This foreshadows a future when visual branding exists in an animated three-dimensional space. The interesting thing is that Weird Type is not just a barebones skywriter. He has some funky filters out of the gate, too. One breaks his word into pieces scattered on the plane - it looks completely straight head, but as soon as you move a few degrees to the side, the illusion falls apart. In another, you type the word you want, but instead of rooting it out, you can wave your hand like a ribbon dancer to spell it out in a police-style tape. In one case, someone actually drew a human figure out of that tape, turning words into sculpture. In this sense, Weird Type filters are a good analogue of Instagram filters. They are easy to use and immediately raise your work to something worth sharing. (You can record videos and photos in the app.) (Image: zach Lieberman) We're seeing a stream of Apple AR apps right now, and another is on the way from Google. However, even against the backdrop of this crest of the wave, Weird Type is notable for the way it integrates text with an AR-like ready-made meme generator that seems to tease a new era in the future. Think about it: Decades ago, logos went from static to page in full motion video. Recently, visual branding has gone from television advertising to up to Twitter personalities. Now that physical space is in the equation with augmented reality applications, brands will have to master consumer participation over and over again. I'm not sure that Weird Type is the key to this, but the experimental app strikes a chord with artists and designers. Or should I say chooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooord?
