Drivers, scavengers, clowns, petty crooks, chokers, zeketers - all ordinary people, with ordinary stories, but told by Moravia so that behind each external routine you see all the same currents. They were born middle-poor, a little simple and slightly lazy (or, to put it another way - not pushing the Romans). But everyone pursues love (or banishes it by mistake...) So many separated/unfulfilled couples I've never met with Ettgar Keret collections. I've noticed a lot of repetitions - drivers, scavengers, clowns, petty crooks, chokers, lynxes - all ordinary people, with ordinary stories, but narrated by Moravia so that behind every external routine you can see all the same currents. They were born middle-poor, a little simple and slightly lazy (or, to put it another way - not pushing the Romans). But everyone pursues love (or banishes it by mistake...) So many separated/unfulfilled couples I've never met with Ettgar Keret collections. I've noticed a lot of repetitions - character types, relationship types, even words and phrases. But I imagined how in fact there are very similar people and events that stand out in some subtle nuances. The stories of these poor people, however, do not look like social protest, not as unfortunate characters of some 19th century English/French authors. Probably because it's the 20th century. And this is Italy! From the present point of view, times in history may seem a little old-fashioned, but I think that the dynamics of Rome established many centuries ago, and the tireless, irresistible hum of the city is eternal. It was very nice to read to get to know the streets and the square. The intelligentsia in these is the telly of the lips. That's how you get the choir. But the noma is bored. All the gledat da go davat leko, yes, and give out Yumrutsi, dori and yes sa with nothing well; The girl doesn't take it all apart.
