This page lists online (interactive) or PDF vocabulary games on this site. You can play them even if you are single and not in the English class. Their goal is to practice learning group of words. Often these are academic words related to topics like technology or research on the subject. Dictionary stock game sections include a quick word word Games, Most words in these practical activities are very common in English. (They're no new vocabulary though.) Many are academic vocabulary (mostly from the academic list of words). Words in puzzles often come from one or more interesting articles on the internet. (Some of them have a link to these articles after practice, so you can read the words in context.) You can also practice in some (related) quizzes. Subscribe to English Detective, our free newsletter, for the systematic practice of the English dictionary. Most of these games and events came from there. (See the registration form in the right column or at the bottom of the page.) Reasons to use Vocabulary Games games are one of the best ways to learn vocabulary. The categorization and manipulation of words helps to make neural connections in the brain. In this way, they will help you memorize words better (and remind you of what you already know.) Many subjects have several activities to give more practice with important AWL words. Some words overlap, but many of them are only on one or two pages. There are too many words in many areas to teach in just one game. Some of these pages have explanations of words before practice. If you prefer, try the game first. You can check the explanations afterwards if you have questions. Many of these games also link to the pdf version, so you can practice the same game offline. Some games also have a section to select the best word categories. These sections are not interactive. You can use pencil and paper to write the category and the words that belong there. For a collection of inexpensive vocabulary game pdfs for classrooms, see Vocabulary Worksheets.I moved some former sections of this page into TOEFL and IELTS Vocabulary practice. Searching the site freefind advanced Attempt to teach a group of intermediate students is not easy. At this level, paraphrasing the basics is boring and introducing more advanced topics can lead to frustration. Tired of seeing only two or three students actually paying attention in your class? It's amazing what a difference a few fun games can make! Things like creating a vocabulary are an integral part of learning English, but they can be boring. Spice up the class with some of these ESL vocabulary games to enhance your learning experience. 1. The Last Man StandingThis game is fast-paced, but allows students some time to think. It also encourages peer learning, as students will pick up the words they hear others say. To play the game, grab the ball and all form a circle. Name a category or theme, such as things found in the kitchen, food, professions and so on. Start by tossing the ball to the student. This student will shout the word word on the subject and throw the ball to another student. As everyone catches the ball, they have to come up with a different word that fits the theme. If they repeat a word that has already been said or can't think of a new one for a few seconds, they should sit on the sidelines. Don't worry, they'll still be learning! Take things up a notch with another version of The Last Man Standing. Instead of naming a topic, each student gives the next student a different theme. For example, you can start with something red. The first student to catch the ball can tell the strawberry and then choose another theme and throw the ball to the next student. This makes the game much more difficult since students can't think a word until they know what their topic is. Want to work from home? Do you maintain a flexible schedule? To have a positive impact? You can use maps from the actual tincture to create a class activity that will excite your students. It's a good, high action game that students really get into. Piction board. To play in a classroom with many students, it is not very practical to use a game board. This means that you will use a board or board in front of the room. Divide the class into two commands and create a small column for each team on one side of the board. You'll record their points here. One man from Team A has to go to the front. Do the student make a card (try using Pictionary Junior cards if adults are too advanced for your class). In addition, you can write words on sheets of paper for students to choose from. The student must pass the word on to his team using only drawings. Students cannot use words, symbols or hand gestures. Limit the time to a maximum of three minutes. Every correct word is a point, and the first team to get 10 points is the winning team. CharadesCharades is very similar to Pictionary, but it uses action to communicate a secret word instead of photos. This is a great game for those days when your class is dragging and people are falling asleep. Get them and make them move! Write down the words on sheets of paper for students to choose. The verbs will probably be the simplest, but you can also use more complex words, provided you are sure that most students know them. Divide the class into two commands and select a piece of paper on one person from each team and spread the word. Teams must guess the correct word for up to three minutes. For every correct word this team gets a point. The team that comes first with ten points is the winning team. Taboo WordsTaboo Words Helps Students with synonyms and descriptions. Separate class in half and two team teams on different sides of the room, facing each other. Each team will choose a person who will sit in front of his team, face them in the hot seat. You will stand behind the students and keep a piece of paper with the word on it. Teams have three minutes (or any amount of time you want to set) to get their hot seat member to say the word on paper. The catch, they can't say a word under any circumstances. Tips for playing in the big class. If you have more than 12 students in the class, things can get a little chaotic with this game. In this case, it is usually easier to divide everyone into teams of 5-6 people and have only one team to go at a time. 20 ObjectsTest memories of your students and vocabulary at the same time with this fun game. All you need is a clear table and 20 common items from all over the class. You can even grab things from your backpack or purse. Arrange the objects on the table and let the students gather around to look at them. Cover everything with a sheet (or something like that) in one minute and send everyone back to their seats. Each student should write as many subjects as they can remember on a piece of paper, all in English.When everything is done, write a list of items on the board and allow students to fix themselves. In addition, you can call objects and give a point for each one, which is correctly written.6 CategoriesStudents will ask to play this game as soon as they get the hang of it! It's a great way to fill the last few minutes of classes, too. If students draw six columns on their paper and write a category at the top of each column. You can choose categories that match what you studied in the class or go with some basics. Popular categories include food, names, cities or countries, furniture, verbs and clothing. Choose a random letter and write it on the board. Give students enough time to write down a word for each category that starts with that letter. You can repeat in new letters as many times as you want.7. Email ScrambleTake a list of words that your students have recently learned and write scrambled versions of everyone on the board. Allow students to decipher the words on their paper. The first person to finish deciphering all the words will win.8 Chalkboard AcronymWrite the word vertically on the board and then the students come, one by one, to write a word, starting with each letter of the vertical word. For example: CuteUnderPorcelainMake is tougher, requiring words to be associated with the acronym.9. What am I thinking? If you've ever played 20 questions, you already know how this game is going. To make it a little easier on your students, however, you're going to include some visual cues. students and make them think about the object. Each student must write 5-10 words describing the object of the object a piece of paper. When you call the time, students exchange documents and try to figure out what the other person has described. The first team, guessing both words, correctly guesses the victory.10. The word BingoYou'll need to do a bit of preparation for this game, but it's worth it. Make bingo sheets with 4x4 grids and add words to each square. Mash them (each of them should be unique) and students mark the correct word when you call it. The first person to finish marking their entire page wins. There are some amusing variations on the word bingo! Image Bingo: Use the pictures on the map of Bingo and call the words that apply. Synonym Bingo: Get these brains working by giving students a word that means the same as the word on their card. Antonim Bingo: It's just like it sounds. Call the antonyms of words on their cards and see how many students get it. ESL vocabulary games make the class being a little more exciting. You can use them to view previously learned words, but keep in mind that games also make great rewards when your students are doing well in class. Oh, and one more thing...
