It's available almost everywhere, it's reduced to ultimate simplicity, and it constantly saves you work, so you don't have to. This is what Adam calls the Holy Grail of ubiquitous text capture. Two Android customers provide the best Simplenote experience. This author prefers the paid ($2.37-ish) SolidNote, but only because of the slight polish on the controls and seemingly less lag during input. mNote, a free alternative, does just as well as work just by displaying and saving your Simplenote stuff, and maybe you won't experience the same lag. If you have additional app recommendations that make it easier to write, brainstorm, and other type-y tasks on Android, tell us about them in the comments. For a while now, digital stores that offer mobile apps for various platforms have introduced a new way for developers to make money and customers to enjoy additional content - in-app purchases. But in-app purchases aren't always without hassle, and if you don't pay much attention to what you're doing, you probably don't enjoy the extra purchased content. Google Play offers Developers and Android users an in-app shopping feature, and we're going to make buying your app's content a lot easier. To understand the differences between different in-app purchase models, Extreme Tech divides them into two main categories: managed and unmanageable in-app purchases. Managed purchases are those purchases that receive the full version of the app, more in-app content, expansion packages, game levels, and subscriptions to magazines, or other premium content. These purchases will stay with your Google Play account forever, and you'll be able to switch from your Android device to your Android device and reinstall your apps complete with in-app shopping content without worrying that you'll lose access to this additional content. The purchase is managed by Google, which ensures that content will always be available to you, even if in some cases - when switching to a new device - you may have to wait a while before the app store finds out that you have access to more content. One important thing to remember what's in order to cancel a subscription to a magazine or other Android-related service, it won't be enough to simply remove the app from your device. You'll have to contact the developer and cancel the subscription so as not to be billed again in the next billing cycle. On the other hand, unmanageable purchases are those purchases that cover a certain type of content in the app, such as coins or other kind of currency offered in some games by some developers, and which are not provided by Google. Therefore, in case you want to upgrade your phone or tablet, in case you need to replace it after an accident or in case you lose it/it is stolen, then you will be surprised to see that this kind of unguided content will not be transferred to a new device. The good news is the app data that contains your in-game coins can be saved and transferred to other devices, but backup is not always without problems. Tagged: Google Play StoreGamingIn-App Shopping End Line! Over the past decade or so, phone calls have become extinct as our primary form of communication with most people, with text messages as a substitute. And if you're going to use text messages as much as you do, you might as well use the best apps to do so. Let's talk about them. Best for most people: Android Messages Android Messages vision Google for SMS applications on Android, and the stock version on Nexus and Pixel devices. The good news is that it's available in the Play Store, so it works on any phone and it's totally free. What makes this app such a good choice is its clean, minimal interface - it just works really well. It's not filled to the brim with superfluous features, it just does what it does. Indeed, this is what most of us have come to expect from Google apps. Like all good SMS apps, it supports MMS (multimedia messages), but it also has a few other tricks up its sleeve. This allows users to attach the following messages to their messages: Photos and GIFs Of Stickers Voice Recordings Data You can also set up conversations by assigning certain colors to contacts, but it will also do it for you automatically if you don't want to be bothered by the setting up of each contact. After a while, you start to associate each contact with their color, so you can take a look at your phone and know exactly who the text is just by color. It's a simple feature that just makes sense. In short, if you're looking for simple text messaging apps that just work, this one is for you. Best for convenience: Facebook Messenger is almost all of us on Facebook, and if you're anything like me, you use Facebook Messenger almost as much as SMS to talk to friends and family. But here's the thing: you can actually do both things from the same interface, as Facebok Messenger supports SMS. It even has what I consider the best feature of the app: Chat Heads for text messages. So you can combine all your messages in this one place. I'm digging it. If you're already a Facebook Messenger, Messenger, can easily include SMS in the app to give it a try. First, open the app and click on the profile picture in the top right corner. In this menu, scroll down and find a text message. Click on this and then click on the SMS slider in Messenger. A pop-up may ask if you want to use Messenger as a default customer- just click Yes. All kinds of new options will be available after that, so feel free to customize it to your liking. Otherwise, you're ready to start using SMS in Messenger. It's also worth noting that aside from the usual Messenger features (such as Chat Heads), Messenger also does this cool thing where it groups together business SMS-any kind of texts that you get from businesses with promotions etc. I think it's pretty cool. Also, if you just want to see SMS and keep your Facebook messages from your feed, just click the SMS button at the top next to the profile picture. Bam. Oh, and it's free. It's hard to beat that price. Best for Power Users: Textra If you're looking for all the bells and whistles from you SMS client, then look no further than Textra. This thing is chock full of killer features, but it still somehow manages not to feel bloated. But actually, I think that's what makes Textra so great: at first glance, it might be as simple as you want it to be, but if you feel like digging in, you can really customize it to do a lot more. Out of the box, it has a clean, dark interface. But if you're not that it has supportive themes like, dark, black, and even smart mode that will light up during the day and switch to night mode at certain times. You can also fully customize the color palette used, as well as the chat bubble and color icon. So if you're into aesthetics, you can pretty much get Textra to look the way you want. But there's a lot more to be honest, more than you would feel like reading if I tried to cram it all into this post. However, here's a quick list of some of my favorite things about Textra: You can rename group texts. You can specify the limit of sending mms messages, and Textra will shrink accordingly. Sent sounds are optional. It supports blacklists of numbers. Fast answers, notifications, and everything else related to notifications is customizable. It has scheduled messages. ... and really, this is just the beginning. Like I said, if you're a power user, this is the app you want. There's only one drawback: the free version has ads that appear as the first entry on your SMS list. It's really annoying. But there's $2.99 in shopping that removes ads that are easily worth the price if you find that you are digging this app as I dig this app. Now, armed with this new knowledge, go ahead and text.
