Protection 2002 has several electrical components that are included and run by electricity. The power source of our cars, that is, the battery not only serves as the engine ignition generation, but also nourishes other components such as headlights, dashboard, windshield wiper, among others. Fuse Box Protects 2002 Each of these elements are powered by the electrical source of our car, however, electricity is not always reliable at all, it has never happened to you that you have an electric device and it burns and sudden rise of light, and in the car can happen the same thing. Protection, having metal elements, can control the electricity and the circumstance of energy transmission, which is overloaded on electrical elements. This overload can damage it, and make our pocket hurt. The fuse box prevents such events, as they serve as a bridge between the electricity team and the electrical element, feeling a high current that exceeds its tolerance, it burns and becomes useless, which disrupts the electric bridge and therefore the passage of energy. In the Owner's Guide you can see this information on how many and what types of fuses Mazda Protects 2002 has, as well as what electrical systems it protects. Where's the fuse box? Most cars have two fuse boxes: one on the left under the steering wheel and the other in the engine compartment on the right side. The inner fuse box is located at the height of the driver's knees, under the steering wheel on the left side. Where the fuses protection 2002 are access to the inner fuse box is somewhat more difficult and even more so when you need to replace the damaged fuse or look for a malfunction in this box, since you have to go upside down or lie your back on the floor next to the pedals and legs outside the car to put your head and be able to work. The inner lid of the fuse requires pressure, which must be applied to plastic dwellings to remove and open it. The user's manual protects 2002 Under the hood: To access this box is enough to open the hood, and it is easily accessible, on the one hand, the security is pressed and the lid is removed to access the fuses and relays of it. Instead, the engine fuse box is next to the battery, which is located to the right of the hood compartment. Each box has an appropriate cover, which was marked with the names of electrical circuits that protect these fuses, as well as their empire and location inside each box. Fuse classification protects 2002 in this user guide for 2002 you will find a classification of fuses that is very friendly when identifying them, since they have a color identification system, yes, as it reads by colors, that is, if the color of the fuse yellow or red will have different tolerances?, the answer is yes, depending on the color will be different electrical tolerances, then, we will name them. Types of guards protect 2002 Red: Tolerance of 10 amplifiers. Blue: Tolerance 15 amps. Yellow: Tolerance 20 amps. Green: Tolerance 30 amps. Orange: Tolerance 40 amps. Additional note: The Orange Fuse 40A is a common fuse of the car's electrical circuits, and being damaged leaves the entire car circuit without power. For high-current fuses, 40A, for example, pink is used and the shape of the fuse changes to a square section instead of flat and elongated, as in the case of orange fuse 40A. Fuse 40A is not the only pink fuse, as the current 50A and 60A use the same pink color. Mazda Maintenance protects 2002 If you are looking to get your Mazda Protect in the best conditions and for a long time you should first know what automotive preventative maintenance is. With this user guide you will learn how to view: what the indicators on the board mean, the lights that have the correct pressure in the tires, how to properly perform a tire replacement to name a few. Mazda's Maintenance Guide protects the 2002 Preventive Maintenance Protection 2002 consists of a number of changes that are being implemented at a given time to reduce the likelihood of failure or wear and tear that require costly vehicle repairs. Feel free to read this user guide first to keep your car in optimal condition as you will be able to know in general a few actions that will prevent your car from breaking down. As part of this guide you will learn a few specific instructions recommended by the manufacturer Mazda to provide good preventive maintenance, such as: Important changes to protect the 2002 Motor Oil: every three months or 5000 kilometers. Oil filter: every 5,000 kilometers. Change the air filter, perform it every two months as part of the basic setting. Bus pressure: fill them at the right pressure, rotate the tyres first for 15,000 kilometers and then every 10,000 kilometers. Recommended reviews to protect 2002 shock absorbers: you need to check if they are worn or leaked, in which case they should be changed, always in pairs. Antifreeze: It is important to check it weekly. Battery every time the oil changes. Headlights: Do inspect the cockpit lamps, guide, and Hydraulic steering fluid: at least once a month, and fill it as soon as your level is bathed. The pump and hoses should also be checked in the event of a leak. Brake fluid: check once a month for leaks. While many changes and changes in parts tend to have a similar time, there are features of each do and model. Obviously, the guide gives you recommendations for protection 2002 so we always recommend checking the guide and recommendations made by the manufacturer Mazda. What is car prevention in six months? Motor oil and filter strips and battery straps exhaust hydraulic fluids automatic transmission fluid chassis lubricating the lights of the ignition lights hoses When the car traveled more than 9,000 kilometers This user guide recommends checking the brakes, lubricant, chassis, ignition candles and gasoline filter for other checks mentioned above.
