Between 1914 and spring 1917, European countries were involved in a conflict known as World War I. Although troops moved across the face of Europe, the United States remained neutral. In 1916 Woodrow Wilson was re-elected president for a second term, largely because the slogan He kent us from war. The events in early 1917 will change that hope. In a disappointment over the effective British naval sanctions, Germany broke its pledge to limit submarine warfare on February 1, 1917. In response to the break-up of the Sussex pledge, the United States established diplomatic relations with Germany. A few weeks later, on February 24, the British delivered the Zimmermann telegram to the U.S. Government in an attempt to tap the growing anti-German sentiment in the United States. The American newspaper published the telegram news on March 1. On April 6, 1917, the U.S. Congress formally declared war on Germany and its allies. The Zimmermann telegram has an impact on American opinion that, according to David Kahn, author of Codebreakers, No other single cryptanalysis has huge consequences. It is his opinion that never before or since has so much turned on a secret message solution. The text is adapted from the articles of The Zimmerman Telegram by Mary Alexander and Marilyn Childress. An intercepted telegram between Germany and Mexico would be the catalyst for changing everything. This Zimmermann Telegram decoder helps prove that the telegram content is true and that it is not a scam. The British government asked Edward Bell, who worked at the American embassy in London, to confirm the contents of the telegram. He decoded him using a 13042 chipher, which was previously rediscovered during World War I by the British Government. The original Decipher of the Zimmermann Telegram was sent via letter from Ambassador Walter Page to the Secretary of State.
