Spotify and Hulu have lowered the price to get both services together to $9.99 a month. Last April, the two companies began offering Spotify Premium and Hulu a limited advertising plan together for $12.99 a month. Now it extends this deal and lowers the price by $3 until June 10, or while the supply last. Existing Spotify Premium users can add Hulu to their plan by visiting your Spotify Services page and activating Hulu's ad-supported plan. For new users, you need to go to this page on Spotify's website and sign up for promotion. Registration will help you access Spotify Premium and Hulu for free per month. You are then automatically charged $9.99 per month. If you're already a Hulu subscriber outside of Spotify, you'll need to cancel your existing account and sign up via Spotify to take advantage of the deal. And subscribers who've signed up for a bundle deal won't have to do anything- you'll automatically migrate to the new $9.99 price next month. Worth noting: The deal does not allow you to add any premium channels such as HBO or Showtime to your Hulu account. If you are currently watching either through Hulu you need to subscribe to them separately rather than. All that said, if you use both services and don't yet bundle them together, then this one is not the brain. Spotify isn't the only music streaming service out there, but it's certainly one of the most popular. Even so, there are countless lesser-known Spotify tips that can transform it from a mediocre radio replacement into your own personal music opening DJ. Whether you use Spotify's free or premium services, there are all kinds of things you can do, get most of the experience. New features are often added to the service, but there isn't much in the way of a tutorial when you start using the platform. To help, we've put together a list of 15 Spotify tips tricks that everyone should know. Don't have a Spotify account yet? Sign up for free on the button below! Up your search Spotify game
