I have great childhood memories of Jiffy Pop by the fire. They're completely false. Jiffy Pop is the hardest way to make popcorn I've seen. Even the stove top training pain. If you pay a lot of attention and keep the pan in constant motion, Jiffy Pop on the gas stove is still nice. The spiral aluminum top is just the sky to look filled. Cooking Jiffy Pop over a campfire leads to a disorder of children. Jiffy Pop really can't be popped up on dancing flames and massively uneven temperatures. If you really want to make a fire Jiffy Pop I suggest you dig some coals out of the fire, make a small pile, and try with a more uniform heat. I'm going camping and I'm taking Jiffy Pop with me! I just use the gas stove I use to pop it. If you've gone camping since the sixties you probably have fond memories of having to grill Jiffy Pop or open fire. Jiffy Pop is the perfect way to make popcorn when you are away from the kitchen or a comfortable microwave. Jiffy Pop popcorn has been a staple in American households for years. It was created by Fred Mennen in 1958. It was introduced in grocery stores around the world in 1959 by ConAgra Foods. It was marketed as a fun family treat. Jiffy Pop's popularity has declined as microwave popcorn has grown. This standalone product was brilliant, given the time it was developed. Although harder to find, Jiffy Pop is still available today. The aluminum pan has a metal handle on it. The pan is covered with aluminum foil, which rotates in a circular way to place the expanding popcorn inside it, when cooked. This may surprise you, but making Jiffy Pop tend to be more complicated than any of the other popping methods. Jiffy Pop seems to follow Murphy's law: Anything that can go wrong goes wrong. Therefore, even if you faithfully follow our recommended steps, we cannot guarantee you that you will be fully satisfied with the results. But hey, trying half the fun - enjoy: See the Jiffy Pop pan - people have found that if any part of the package has dents or flaws they can cause problems down the line. So be careful when you buy a Jiffy Pop that you find those with pristine packaging and treat them carefully until you are ready to start popping. Gently remove the cardboard cover - make sure not to damage the foil coating underneath it. If you pierce the foil, it will not rise properly during popping, dramatically affecting the results. Heat the burner over medium heat - If you're using an electric oven be sure to heat the burner for 3-4 minutes so that's at the temperature when you put the Jiffy Pop pan on the pop. Place the pan on the burner - Let the pan set for another minute or two, while the oil and/or oil that is inside is coming to a temperature. Once you're here hissing sound it's time to move on to the next step. Shake the pan in circular motions - For satisfactory results, it is necessary to shake the pan continuously and quickly in an hour's motion until the end of the jumping cycle. I didn't say it would be easy! As the popcorn appears the foil will expand into a large silver ball. Remove the pan from the stove - Once the foil is completely dilated and popping slowed down it's time to remove the pan heat. Don't try to get the last few pop cores, that you end up burning the popcorn at the bottom of the pan. Puncture a large ball of foil with a knife shape - Be careful when you do this, since the steam will come streaming which seriously burn your face or hands. Make a few more incisions, opening the top, turning the pan and foil into a bowl. Now you are ready to enjoy a real retro treat. Jiffy Pop is almost extinct, but with retro movement it seems to be making a bit of a comeback. It is available in some grocery stores and in bulk on Amazon. You can check out the ConAgra website for a store near you. Jiffy Pop is also handy when you're in the wild from microwave ovens and such. This product works well on both charcoal and gas grills. You can put the pan right on the grill, but it works better if you have something like a cast iron griddle put down first. This tends to improve your results, since the heat is more even. Just be careful because the metal handle can get very hot. Using a potholder for a grill is a good idea. If you plan to cook Jiffy Pop popcorn by the fire, I wish you the best of luck! I would suggest using a shovel or similar implementation to extract a bunch of hot coals from the fire and cook over them rather than over the dancing flame. It'll give you half a chance. Photo Credit: slworking2 We all love S'mores. This dirty, delicious ship sailed. So what else can you do next to a warm, smoky flame? Popcorn, of course! You may have tried Jiffy Pop before: You put the pan over the fire, shake it, and popcorn appears inside the aluminum dome. It's the same idea, except for its homemade, a little more, and nixes three grams of trans fat per serving. (Isn't it illegal?!) I call it Fiery Pop. You can call it what you want, but nothing completes a bonfire night like popcorn. So try this simple project for a crisp, salty, night snack perfect for sharing or inhaling yourself! © the Ontario Printer, 2020 Privacy We aim to provide affordable customer service.
