You need one bag to make one tote, including handles. I sprayed them into the sink and they washed up big. You can easily hold a couple of jugs of milk in them no problem. Heavy, recycled and reduced waste in our world; Great thing! Have fun! Take a few inches from the bottom to square up the bag, the bags are never straight. Cut 7 inches off the top. From this 7 inches cut two handles 3.5 inches. Cut these two parts 20 inches (or more if you want more pens). Fold in half and run your fingers over the edge to push down. Sew the open side using a serger or sewing machine. Do the same for the other pen. Set the handles aside. Fully open the bag and use your fingers to push down the outer edges. Serge/stitch bottom. Turn off the bag inside, the wrong side together. With the bag in the head, make sure the corners are pushed out and press the seam down. Sew close to the edge to attach the bottom, the French seam. This makes the bottom tighter and less likely to split. With the bag still in the back turn down the top about 2 inches. I like to have the words on the front shown so make sure times are above words, if you have, if not, don't worry about it. Place the handles 5 inches on each side. I use metal chained to keep the handles in place. Flip the bag over and place the 2nd matching handle until the first side. Sew about 1/4 of the top backstitching on all four All the way around removing clips as you go. I then go back to all four handles 1/4 below the first stitching, I don't go all the way around again and I try to avoid any letters on the front of the bag. Pull the corners about 3 inches and sew straight straight on both sides. Turn the bag right, cut all the loose threads and you're done! Long time no see. To make a link to the tote bag today. ex_A.pdfex-B.PDF L.L. Bean L.L. Bean Boat and Tote is a favorite classic, and rightly so. The bag, which was introduced in 1944 as an Ice Carrier Bean (for transporting ice from car to ice chest) is ideal in almost every way. But there's only one problem with these preppy life staples: They're depressingly hard to clean. Well, just in time for Memorial Day, when we assemble our boat and sweepstakes and go out of town, I'm here to tell you everything you need to know about cleaning these favorite canvas horses. Sanctioned Path: Spot Treatment under the care instructions provided by L.L. Bean, dirty or painted boat and Tote should be cleaned. Of course, the spot clean is an instruction that it's a bit of light on specifics, which is why you have me to break it down in more detail for you. First, you will need a soft detergent. Liquid laundry detergent is an obvious option, but you can also push a dish or hand soap into debt, or something like Dr. Bronner's pure castyl liquid soap (above), along with water, a small bowl, and a light sponge or rag. The light color part is very important, especially if you are using a sponge as the transfer of dye can very easily occur and then you will have a completely different kind of place in need of treatment. Once you've collected the tools, dilute a small amount of detergent (1 teaspoon to 1 tablespoon will do so) with about a cup of water, dip the light sponges or rags into the solution, squeeze it so that it's moist and sudsy, and scrub on the stains and contaminated parts of the bag, working with the grain. Repeat as needed until the stains are gone, then allow the air bag to dry before use. Rogue Method: Machine washing Maytag Caveats are needed before I tell you how the machine wash the boat and the tote. First, washing machines is not an officially sanctioned cleaning method, meaning that if you decide to go down this path, it will invalidate any warranty L.L. Bean makes to replace damaged items. The second caveat is that washing the boat and tote will change the texture of the canvas. If you're a person who likes more broken in toth, this won't be a problem at all, but if you want your bag to keep its original stiffness, the washing machine is not for you. If, after reading these warnings, you are all Game for sucking the boat and tote in the wash, here are the instructions that you want to follow: Use only cold water; it is crucial because the canvas is prone to contraction, and hot water may well turn your your in a bag the size of a doll. Wash the bag yourself, or with other heavy canvas items to prevent its weight from damaging more delicate things. Choose a regular or heavy service cycle. Change the shape of the bag and dry the air. When Boat and Toth comes out of the washing machine, you may feel concerned about the condition it is in, but push those feelings aside because I promise it will be good. You will need to fight the bag back into the likeness of its original shape and once you do so, let it dry. As it dries, it will lose the bedraggled look it had when it came out of the puck and converts into a boat and tote you know and love. One last strange tip: VacuumingYou can push a vacuum into all sorts of odd jobs, including ridding the boat and tote from dirt, crumbs, hair, sand, etc. either use a portable vacuum, or a standard model equipped with an upholstery tool to give the interior and exterior a thorough transition. The crevice tool can be useful in order to get into the deep folds in the interior of the bag. The vacuum cleaner won't replace slick treatment or washing machines, but it's good to keep in mind if a trip to the beach or a picnic in the woods leaves your favorite bag filled with trash. While doing my biennial cleaning from the porch of my house last week, I came across a mountain of reusable tote bags. There was more than a dozen stuffed inside each other, marked with logos of local businesses and events that I have attended in recent years. All of these bags have been placed in the usual corner grocery store gear, but because they are so compact, I've only used four top bags on a bunch over the last year of shopping, oblivious to the rest. Not that I could use them, even if I tried. Four bags, combined with my hard A grocery drawer, enough for each grocery trip. Who needs 15 tote bags anyway? This is a huge problem. In our frantic rush to get away from disposable disposable plastic bags, we went overboard with a tote production. They are given out as free gifts, or as for even more free gifts, charities and retailers. They are sold in every gift shop, stamped with the name of any city you want everyone to know what you visited. They are available at every grocery store checkout for $1, a quick guilt-free purchase that will save you the embarrassment of walking out the door with plastic groceries bags. Now we have too much. As Heather Dockray wrote for Mashable, what makes tote bags so devastatingly cruel to our home environment is how much space they take in our vulnerable warehouses. Tell me you don't have a tote bag full of other sweepstakes. Maybe you have a closet full of nothing but totes, or maybe just a closet stuffed with gills. Mike Licht/ CC BY 2.0 Totes are produced almost as if they were disposable bags, which is ironic given that they should be a reusable product with an uncertain lifespan. (Have you ever worn a tote bag? And yet, there doesn't seem to be slowing down or ending the speed at which they churned out. Thomas Harlander said at JOURNAL LA last fall: There's that, 300 million people in the United States? Let's say the average person consumes enough food to fill two reusable tote bags a week. If so, only 600 million reusable tote bags should exist in this country at any given time. Now, that's just an assumption, but I suspect there are at least 600 million reusable tote bags out there, which means we can stop making them. I hate to call for the layoff of thousands of workers at tote factories, but guys, we have enough bags. THE MISSION HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED. Then there is the debate about carbon traces, and the fact that the cotton tote should be used 131 times to achieve the same emission factor per use as a disposable plastic bag, with that number reduced to 11 uses for recycled plastic tote bags (for example, these red-and-black Lululemon bags all seem to be there). Some people use this as a reason not to embrace totes, but I reject it based on wildlife damage and decay from the debris that we know disposable plastics cause in the natural world. (The Surfrider Foundation is considering some of these false claims about the so-called benefits of disposable plastic bags.) In addition, we can completely break down, even if we are committed to the cause. Think about it: If we all owned only four reusable bags of cotton, and used these bags every time we bought, say, once a week, we would break even in 2.5 years. (Yes, there are totes I've owned for 2.5 years, so I think it's an unrealistic proposition.) And that, if you think the tote will be equivalent to a plastic bag in terms of carrying ability, which it certainly isn't. I can fit the equivalent of 3 plastic bags in each of my totes, which will bring break-even to about 10 months. Stick with recycled plastic totes and you'll break even under months (or just one month if you stash three plastic bags worth in each one). The problem is not the reusable sweepstakes themselves - they are a great invention - but that we have too many. We must learn to tell them no to curb production. We should drop the kind offer of a bag to take home, which is exactly what Bee Johnson and other zero-waste/minimalist experts have said all along: Reject the freebie!
