Ancient Egypt has a long long later, scientists. When the first Europeans began exploring North Africa, they saw and marveled at the sphinx and the great pyramid. By the 18th century, historians and grave robbers began to find many artifacts. Some of those early diggers were not as careful as modern science could hope for, damaging or destroying many artifacts. But their discovered art, writing and architecture gave glimpses of some of the most fascinating figures in history. Nefertiti. Hatshepsut. Tutankhamen, what are you? Cleopatra. At first, the hieroglyphical writings were a mystery. They were different from any other writing system ever known, and the researchers could not translate them. In 1799, a French soldier discovered rosetta's stone. The carved stone was a declaration made in 196 BC in Memphis. It had three versions of the same text: hieroglyphs, demotic manuscript and ancient Greek. Here was finally a translation key! Since then, Egyptologists have been able to interpret most of the hieroglyphs that still exist. They can tell us a lot about how the ancient Egyptians lived. Scientists know from their art what the ancient Egyptians used. We have a wide range of costumes illustrated after these period photos in the size and styles of the whole family. You can become a special historical figure, like Cleopatra, or a general ordinary citizen. Ancient Egyptian society was once unique in that the legal status of women was as great as that of men. Nobody knows where it was from. But women could and did almost any social role. The only possible exception was religion. Egypt was and is a desert climate. So the clothes were usually light and modern standards. Both men and women often went topless, especially in the lower social classes. (We do not recommend it in most situations – at least not for women!) They used light, often black fabrics such as linen and, after the time of Alexander the Great, cotton. They knew about wool, but they thought animal fibers were taboo so rarely. Wealthy people may have been wearing a card coat or cape, but they should not have used it in any temple or sanctuary. Bed linen was most often used in a natural immaculate color, although they had plant-based dyes that produced red, yellow or blue threads. Sometimes they also bleached their fabrics simply by placing it in the hot sun. If you live in an area where Halloween is likely to be cold and plan to wear your costume outside, you will face a challenge. If your goal is historical accuracy, you can use a reference or a reference. What if you want to be an Egyptian warrior? Ancient Egyptians used spears and bows Arrows. They did not use long swords like Romans and later peoples. If you're trying historical accuracy, don't choose a sword. Some soldiers would carry daggers or sickles. sickle sings. short. curved blade for melee. But usually they prefer to engage with their enemies from afar, launching their arrows and spears from the carriage. If your deepest desire is to use a long sword, maybe choose to be a Roman or Spartan soldier, not an Egyptian. What about the mummies? We can't talk about ancient Egypt without mentioning mummies! Although they are now horror films, for Egyptians they were sacred. In their religion, Pharaoh, some nobles, and a few nobles could live a life after death with the gods. The only way they could do that was if their bodies survived after death. The earliest mummies were probably accidents, but Egyptian embalming machines developed complex methods and rituals. In addition to mummified, the body had to be buried together with food and household items for use in the afterlife. Only the rich could afford to guarantee themselves a life after death. Europe was fascinated by mummies when Napoleon's soldiers unearthed the first ones at the end of the 18th century. The Gothic rise of fiction in the 19th century gave mummies a solid place in pop culture. So you can choose whether you are a straightforward historical Egyptian or a mummy of a horror movie. Whatever your choice, we have a suit that you wear! Page 2If you are looking for historical costume ideas, you will find a lot based on ancient Egypt.
