This time is used to show the connection between the present and the past and is commonly used in everyday conversations, in news, on the radio, and when writing letters. To create the real ideal voltage of any verb, you combine the present verb to have plus past participation of the main sentence verb. Past participation of the ordinary verb is the basic word plus-ed. You can find a list of past participle irregular verbs here. One example of this time is: jumped. Having is a real tense and jumping past participle. Some other forms of this time: lived; She lived her life. They have already written three letters. Worked: I've been working here since I graduated from high school. Did: He finished his homework. Were: We were in Canada.Has forgotten: She forgot her folder. There are many different situations where the present ideal voltage can be used. It can be used as follows: To describe an action that repeats between the past and the present. Example: We went to the beach many times. Describe an action that began in the past and continues to this day in the future. Example: I have been living in the United States ever since 1990.To I described an action that has not yet been finished. Example: It rained a lot this month. Describe an action that has been completed in the recent past. Example: I just finished an internship at a museum. Describe an action when time is not an important aspect. Example: She lost her wedding ring. There are times when you can't use the present perfect time. For example, you can't use it with specific expressions of time that have already finished, such as last year, the month when I was a kid, etc. The real ideal time can be used with expressions that are uncertain in time: I lost my handbag. We've seen this movie before. He broke his leg. There was an accident. Some examples of this perfect time used to express an unfinished period of time: We have not seen it today. They've been to the mall twice this month. She's watched this show three times this week. Examples of using the present are perfect in talking about events that have occurred in the recent past, but the effect of a recent event still felt now include: Kids made a mess in the kitchen. He started a new job. She's done her job. This ideal voltage can also be used in questions. Here are some examples: Where did I leave my sandals? Would you be in England? Did she meet John? Other combinations of wordsIn the supplement, you can use time-related adverbs in the present perfect time, as long as they do not refer to the time that is over. These words include: already, simply and for now. Some examples of how these words are used are: The book came out yesterday, but I've already read it. (Already used to express that something happened earlier than expected.) She just left the building. (Just used to convey that the event happened some time ago.) He's not done
