TripAdvisor tips for the best SIM cards and where to buy themWhile it is well known for reviews, booking hotels, flights and holidays, TripAdvisor also has many user reviews that can help you guide yourself through SIM cards that have been tried and tested in France.Here are some top tips from TripAdvisor users:The easiest solution, but not necessarily the cheapest, is to go to an Orange store and purchase a SIM card. You will need a GSM phone DEBLOCKED. Bring your passport so necessary for registration. You will receive your own number in French, and it will be free to receive calls and text messages. The cheapest and best do not normally go together. Orange has the best network, but it's not necessarily cheap, although it has some interesting offers for tourists. I prefer to pay more and have reliable services. I prefer to pay a few extra euros to go with the most reputable operator. When I turn on the phone, Orange is always there. Pro:Good value for moneyFrance has good coveragePrepaid credit when necessaryNo contract in the required storeIt could be compatible with current phonesThe lucky networks are sold in storeEU roaming options on all networks No device offered with SIM card packagesCan only be used on GSM unlocked SIMID phones is it necessary to use SIM cards Another question about finding the best SIM? Q: Does it stay with other SIM card providers in France? A: There are several smaller carriers providing SIM cards in France, including La Poste Mobile, LeFrenchMobile, Lycamobile, Régló Mobile, Syma Mobile and Lebara Mobile. They are all run through the basic providers I outlined above. While it is possible to find slightly different offers and plans, we think it is always the most well to stay with the main suppliers. However, if you find a better offer for one of these operators, they can be trusted. Trust. Trust.
