Made from 20 different roots and herbs (including Gentian root, a bitter herb long used to aid digestion), Moxie has a somewhat bitter, somewhat sweet taste considered an acquired flavor, even by its rabidly loyal fans known as Moxie Congress. The state of Maine named Moxie its official drink in 2005, and the museum in Union, Maine, (the birthplace of inventor Moxie) even houses a whole Moxie wing dedicated to displaying memorabilia and the original Moxie soda stand. 4 of the 10 Ale-8-One Original from: Winchester, KY Distribution Districts: Kentucky, Southern Ohio, Southern Indiana, Knoxville, New York, and Atlanta, Georgia Dear once a soft drink invented in Kentucky that still exists, Ale-8-One is a ginger and fruit flavored soda. Creation of G.L. Wainscott during Ban, Ale-8-One from the slogan Late, that is the last thing in soft drinks. The slogan also masked the word ale, which was a touchy term in that era, although the formula did not contain alcohol. In 2003, Ale-8-One Ale-8-One its first new product with the original formula hit the market in 1926: Diet Ale-8-One. Three years later, the company expanded the production of Ale-8-One lollipops and salsa under the same brand. 5 of 10 Manhattan Special Originally from: Brooklyn, NY Distribution Areas: New York's Secret Family Recipe for Manhattan Pure Espresso Coffee Soda has been carefully guarded since it was developed in Brooklyn in 1895, but the company names the best coffee beans in the world and pure cane sugar as the keys to the success of the unique drink. Tasters have noted super-fizziness, a strong, roasted coffee flavor, and a serious kick of sweetness in both regular and diet versions. Prefer bottled coffee on the tamer side? Manhattan Special also offers dairy, flavored varieties of iced coffee, not to mention non-coffee, fruit-flavored fizzy drinks. 6 out of 10 Big Red Originally from: Waco, TX Distribution areas: Austin, Texas, and Wal-Marts across the U.S. When Big Red was born in 1937, the original nickname was Tang Sun Red Cream Soda, calling the fiery color that sets it apart from other creamy fizzy drinks. The name was shortened to Big Red in 1959, and since then, other great fragrances have been introduced such as The Big Red Diet, Big Blue, Big Red Vanilla Float, Big Peach, Big Pineapple, Big Lemonade, Big Orange and Retro Big Red. The taste of Big Red was likened to a soda cream combo and strawberry chewing gum. 7 out of 10 Ski Originally from: Breese, IL Distribution Areas: St. Louis, MO, and Southern Illinois Using rewards money he earned from a nabbing bank robber in 1936, Edward Lefty J. Meyer bought a used bottling machine to run his own soda line at the Excel Rosetta Company. By 1961, Excel had begun bottling Double-Cola's latest invention, Ski, a citrus soda whose taste was akin to mountain dew, but with a more pronounced orange taste. In Clinton County, Illinois, where this soft drink is produced, ski enthusiasts are so loyal that new restaurants wouldn't dream of opening without this precious soda on tap. Eight of Blenheim's 10 Original from: Blenheim, SC Distribution Area: Various retailers around the US natural source water in South Carolina became a health craze and vacation destination in the 1700s thanks to its purported mineral benefits. Around 1900, Blenheim resident Dr. C. R. May had a bright idea of a bottle of spring water with the addition of Jamaican ginger to make the taste more palatable. Sold in only 12-ounce glass bottles, this feisty, sinus-cleaning ginger ale comes in #3 (extra spicy), original #5 (soft but retains a ginger kick), and #9 (diet). 9 out of 10 Buffalo Rock Originally out: Birmingham, AL Distribution Areas: Southeast USA Another A drink with a spicy-than-average flavor profile. Buffalo Rock Southern Spice Ginger Ale was first formulated as a cure for stomach ailments in 1901. Today's Buffalo Rock Dark Dark In color with pronounced carbonation and spicy ginger kick that can make your eyes water. 10 of Vernor's 10 Originally from: Detroit, MI Distribution areas: West Coast, Texas, Washington, D.C. Area This golden excuse, Detroit's powerfully effervescent soda standard, which tastes like a not-too-sweet blend between cream soda and ginger ale, according to fans. Not to be left behind by other long-preserved fizzy drinks, Vernor's was designed by Detroit pharmacist James Vernor before he was called into battle in the American Civil War in 1862, but it wasn't until he returned home in 1866 that he discovered the secret of the greatness of his soft drinks. Before leaving, Vernor kept his ginger drink in an oak barrel, which radically turned ginger ale inside. Vernor's is still soaked in oak barrels before being bottled, resulting in a distinctive final product. Even if the city's appeal fails, Mayor Bloomberg may take this statistic as a consolation: Only 13 cities have fewer problems with pop music than NYC does, according to data we collected on soda consumption and its effects. If any city needs a soda cap, this is Laredo's last place, although it may be a harder sell. Texans tend to oppose state restrictions on what they can buy and consume, said Tracy Ledoux, Ph.D., R-D, an assistant professor at the University of Texas Obesity Research Center.
