If you need a really last minute gift, try this nerdy card game you can print on stock and play today. The bowel examination, designed by microbiome researcher David Coll, digs your microbes against opponents' opponents: you can contract infection, take probiotics, and watch antibiotic-resistant genes spread through the population. Sounds like real fun. The table in front of you represents your gut, and you can fill it with microbes: useful ones, pathogens, and opportunistic microbes that live in the beneficial area so you can draw a card to change your health and give those microbes a chance to change sides. You can scan pathogens with a fecal transplant card, or you may draw a tetracycline card that kills any of the unstaked microbes with an antibiotic-resistant card. There is even a homeopathic card that does absolutely nothing. The downloadable version is here, although if you want to support creators, it is also available on Amazon in a boxed group. Here are the esl printable word games that help students improve their understanding of parts of speech. It's a difference on classic clause exercises, but students need to choose any word from a particular part of speech. For example: The day was _____ Goal: Identify parts of speech activity: Fill the level of completing the gap story, lower to medium chart: Type a few words on Represent different parts of speech (i.e. names, verbs, preverbs, etc.). As a group, ask students to select a portion of the speech for each word, without those parts of speech as students recognize them. Pointing to the different parts of the speech recorded on the board, we invite random students asking them to provide other examples of the referred part of the speech. Once students feel comfortable with these different parts of speech, students have a spouse. Distribute the worksheet, make sure you cut each sheet in quarters between the list of words and the story. Ask students to work together to fill out the word sheet. Once the students fill out the word sheet, they must fill out the story. Go around the room helping students with difficulty. Difference: In order to teach specific vocabulary, provide a vocabulary list of targeted words for each part of the speech. Do the preliminary steps mentioned above, but instead of writing just any word on board, make sure you use the words from the target vocabulary list. Ask students to use the target vocabulary list when giving other examples of each part of the speech. Guide students to complete the worksheet using words in the target vocabulary list. Explore the use of word shapes to further expand vocabulary by knowing parts of speech. name _____ Verb _____ Noun _____ Verb _____ Noun _____ Verb _____ Adjective _____
