Initial Configuration of the Warning Network If the DHCP connection fails when downloaded, the PS/2 IP-KVM switch will not have an IP address. If this initial configuration doesn't meet your requirements, the initial IP configuration you need to access the PS/2 IP-KVM switch for the first time is described below. 4.1.1 Initial configuration via DHCP server By default, the PS/2 IP-KVM switch will attempt to contact the DHCP server in the subnet to which it is physically connected. If the DHCP server is found, it can provide a valid IP address, gateway address, and clean mask. Before you connect your device to your local subnet, be sure to complete the appropriate configuration of the DHCP server. It's a good idea to set up a fixed IP appointment to the PS/2 IP-KVM MAC address. You can find the MAC address tagged on the underside. If this initial configuration doesn't meet your local requirements, use the customization tool to customize values with your needs. The installation tool can be found on the CD ROM supplied with this package. You can follow the procedure described below. PS/2 IP-KVM Switch Setting Tool MAC Address Detection Connect the IP-KVM switch to your computer, either via local network or USB. Start the customization tool with CD ROM on the computer that ip-KVM switch installed. Depending on the connection (USB or network) the detection of the device is different.
