The idea of an irregular verb is important in the acquisition of second languages, where the verb paradigms of a foreign language are systematically learned and exceptions are listed and carefully noted. For example, a French textbook may contain a section on the back that lists the irregular French verbs in tables. Irregular verbs are often the most commonly used verbs in the language. In linguistic analysis, the concept of an irregular verb is most likely to be used in psycholinguistics and in studies on the acquisition of first languages, where the aim is to determine how the human brain processes its mother tongue. A debate among linguists of the 20th century revolved around the question of whether young children learn all verb forms as separate vocabulary pieces or whether they derive forms through the application of rules. Since a child can hear a normal verb for the first time and immediately reuse it in another form that he has never heard before, it is clear that the brain works with rules, but irregular verbs need to be processed differently. Historical linguists rarely use the irregular verb category. Since most irregularities can be explained historically, these verbs are only irregular when viewed synchronously, not when viewed in their historical context. When languages are compared informally, one of the few quantitative statistics that is sometimes cited is the number of irregular verbs. These counts are not particularly accurate for a variety of reasons, and academic linguists are reluctant to quote them. But it seems that some languages have a greater tolerance for paradigm irregularities than others. Below is our complete list of printable irregular verbs worksheets. Lists are arranged in different formats so that you can use the one that best suits your needs. Irregular verbs are difficult to understand because they do not follow the normal verb tension rules. Therefore, it is necessary to remember them individually. It is also very helpful to understand the simple, participatory and perfect aspects of the past, present and future. This game helps students practice spelling past tense and past irregular verbs. Divide students into pairs (A and B) and give each student a worksheet. The top grid of the worksheet contains 12 past tense or past irregular participle verbs. The verbs are written forward, down and diagonal. The task of the students is to find their partner's irregular verbs by calling grid coordinates. Students take it in turns to call coordinates to their partner, e.g. A4. If there is a letter in this square, her partner says Hit and reveals the letter. The student then writes the letter in the lower grid and has another twist. If the space is empty, your partner says miss. The student then marks the place with a cross and play goes to the other student. The first student to find all 12 irregular verbs wins the game. In this free past simple irregular verbs game, students play bingo by matching the infinitive form of irregular verbs and matching them with past simple irregular verbs. Give each student a bingo card. Call the infinitive form of irregular verbs from the caller's sheet in a random order. When students have the past simple form of verb on their card, they cross it. When a student has crossed all nine verbs, he or she calls 'Bingo'. When a student calls bingo, the student reads the nine irregular verbs and says both the infinitive and past simple forms. If the verbs are correct, the student wins the round. Play multiple rounds with students who receive a different bingo card each time. You then divide the students into groups of four or five. The students then play the game in their groups with students who take it alternately as bingo callers. This will continue until all bingo cards have been used. Here's an entertaining irregular verb game to help students remember simple irregular verbs. Give each student pair a set of irregular verbs and past simple irregular verb cards. Students mix the cards and distribute them face down into two on the table. Students then take it in turns to flip a card from each set. The goal of the game is to find matching pairs of infinitive and past simple irregular verbs. When a student flips two cards that match, such as awake and awakened, the student retains the cards and receives a point. The student can then score an additional point by using the past simple irregular verb in a sentence. If the two cards do not match, the one of the Cards over again, keep them in their original place. Then it's the next student's turn to pick up two cards and so on. This will continue until all cards match. The student with the highest score at the end of the game is the winner. This printable irregular verb worksheet helps students learn and practice 10 common irregular verbs in the past and present. Give each student a copy of the two-page worksheet. Students begin with a categorization and matching exercise in which they organize irregular verbs into current and past forms and then match the corresponding forms of each verb. Students then go to a gap-filling exercise, in which they complete sentences with the current and past tension-laden verbs. Students then answer ten simple questions with the ten verbs and write their answers in sentence form. Finally, students create three questions of their own with the irregular verbs from the worksheet, and then ask and answer the questions with a partner. In this set of free irregular verb activities, students play a pelmanism game where they infinitive and past simple irregular verbs fit together. Students then practice asking and answering simple questions with the verbs. Give each student pair a set of irregular verb cards that mix and spread them face down on the desk. Students then play a Pelmanism game, where they take it in turns to flip two cards. When a student flips a matching pair of infinitive and past simple irregular verbs, he retains the two cards and has another twist. If the cards do not match, the student flips them over and holds them in the same place. This will continue until all cards match. The student with the most cards at the end of the game wins. Then, give each student a copy of the worksheet. Ask students to answer questions with the simple irregular verbs of the first activity. Students write short answers in the squares of their worksheet in random order. The students then work together with a new partner. Students exchange their questionnaires and take turns to guess why their partner wrote the words or phrases on the squares. They do this by asking and answering simple questions from the past. When a student learns what an answer is, he or she crosses it. Students then share their findings with the class. Here's a challenging irregular verb practice game to help students help to practice the three forms of the 20 most common irregular verbs in the English language. Give each group of three a set of base shape, past tense and past participle irregular verb cards. Students mix each set of cards and distribute them face down on the table in three sets, starting with the base form cards, then the past exciting cards and ending with the past participle cards. The goal of the game is to say and three matching matching Verb cards in a row. A student starts by flipping an irregular verb card from the base form, e.g. going. The student then says the past tense form of the irregular verb (e.g. went) and flips a card from the past set of tension. If the card matches, the student says the earlier participatory form of the irregular verb, e.g. away. The student then hands over a card from the previous participle set. If the card matches, the student retains all three cards and has another round. If at any time a student says the wrong form of the irregular verb they need, or flips a card that does not match, the cards are flipped to keep them in their original place. Then it's the next student's turn to play and so on. The game continues until all cards match. The student with the most irregular verb cards at the end of the game is the winner. In this irregular verb activity, students guess what their partner did yesterday by making statements with past simple irregular verbs. Divide students into pairs (A and B) and give each student a worksheet. Students then guess what their partner did yesterday by completing each sentence with a simple, irregular verb of the past and adding it to their idea, such as when the invitation is to eat (eat). The student could write: I think you ate a pizza at noon. When students complete their sentences, they verify that their guesses are correct or false. They do this by taking it alternately to read each statement to their partner. Your partner replies yes, I did or No, I did not. I...' Students receive one point for each correct guess. The student with the highest score in each pair at the end of the activity wins. Wins.
