Johan Sebastian Bach, In his 30s and church creatures, it was angry. It's not good enough that his boss, Duke, hinders his creativity. Now Jay has given him 10 years, Frederick Muller, a servant he suspects is a spy! The soundtrack score includes the Brandenburg Concertos, produced by David Devine for Sony Music of New York, the Slovak Philharmonic, commissioned to perform the soundtrack and performed by Ondrej Leonard. Ten-year-old plotr Frederick Muller was a poor boy who lived with his mother Gerta and father Josef in the early 18th century Duke of Prussian. Joseph is duke's butler and will do anything to impress the Duke. Joseph is also far from Frederick, who did not want to be a servant of the Duke but as a stone. On Frederick's birthday during the party, Frederick was invited to Johann Sebastian Bach storm in and argue with the Duke about his working conditions and music, which they both said should be played in the church, Bach said the new music should be played and happy should start playing, but Duke liked only dirges, or as he called them old hymns, to impress the Duke again, Joseph made Frederick Bach's assistant. At first, Bach was annoyed at Frederick, but began to see Frederick as a friend and they spent a lot of time together. Joseph began to hate Bach when Bach took Frederick to the Red Palace, the home of Duke's grandson, Prince August, for the show. In one month, the Duke's fury, the final straw was when Bach applied for another position for Prince Leopold in the Koten Duke Fury and Concert Masters. They arrested Bach. Meanwhile, Joseph was angry when Frederick continued to support Bach, but Frederick was fed up with the way his family continued to evade the Duke and declared that Bach was freerer than Joseph and others in the Frederick household ran away, and Joseph stormed up to Bach's prison and ripped his music. Bach can play without listening to his music, saying he learns from memories. Joseph begged Bach not to drive Frederick away from him, but Bach told him that he (Joseph) was the only one who could drive Frederick away. Joseph left the next day, Prince August and his fiancée Elonora tried to free Bach, but the Duke dismissed it, comparing Bach to slavery, but Frederick and Josef came in at the time, freeing others, he said bach's music made him feel free and the soul of the men could not hold prisoners. The Duke admitted defeat, leaving Bach free. The film ends with Bach and Frederick deciding to play songs like Bach playing for the crowd, duke and concertmasters representing the Old Guard, sitting nicely off close to the crowd, and the Duke stating that he still likes old hymns and concerts agree, throwing Ted Dykstra as Johan Sebastian, Bach, Kyle Laben as Frederick Muller, Ian D. One of the giants of classical music works on the court of Duke Wilhelm Ernst of Sachsen-Weimer, a relationship it has troubled. The Battle for Bach's Freedom It appeals to young audiences by adding fictional children with similar problems. Frederick, Duke's young servant, was sent to spy on Bach. The young Frederick's family man has been a personal servant to the Duke family for generations. Frederick's father wanted a young boy to train for the same job, but Frederick dreamed of becoming Mason Stone. Bach and Frederick lived up to the common question: Can their dreams be fulfilled? Selected Awards: The film is part of the composer's special work. The series won the 1996 CableACE Award for Best Children's Series and won the Gemini (Canadian Emmy) award for best youth program or series. The series was also guided by the American Library Association to all schools and state libraries in the 1996 Battle for Freedom, Bach himself won the Oppenheim Golden Seal Award for Best Children's Video and the FIRST KIDS AWARD for best children's video from the Front for Quality Children's Video. Outstanding performers: Ted Dykstra, Kyle Labine, Ian D. Clark Director: Stuart Gillard the film provides advice on the life of Johann Sebastian Bach, based on the fact that Duke Wilhelm imprisoned Bach for four weeks when the composer tried to resign and join the home of the Duke's cousin Prince. Leopold of Anhalt-Kothen tells your children that Bach worked for the Duke with the castle and they competed for his services. One of them kept him locked up for four weeks. He's not going to work for another Aristotle. Bach's music is considered a new song and out of step with some of the traditional hymns that some employers love. Children's characters are hypothesized. The Bach family produced more than 50 famous musicians over seven generations. The most important member of this family is Johann

Sebastian Bach (1685 - 1750), who himself has 20 children, seven with his first wife and 13 with his second, Bach, recognized as the greatest creature of his time. Orchestra, fugue, chorale and fantasy He mixes these patterns with pleasant countertops, rich textures and beautiful melodies. At the beginning of his career, Bach's composition was criticized by church officials for leaving traditional music. At the end of his life, Bach's compositions were considered obsolete by the public, and for 80 years after his death, Bach's work was generally ignored (two notable exceptions were Mozart and Beethoven, both of whom recognized Bach's genius), an interest in Bach's work revived in the mid-19th century, with a performance organized by another famous composer, Menman Felix, Mendelssohn Bach, considered a master piece of counter-musical techniques that weaved many different melody lines, contrasting each other with compliments and coordinating them. Bach is very studio and hard working. He was blind at the end of this life, according to legend, because as a young man, he spent hours studying with dim candlelight. In the 18th century, great musicians were kept on the placeholder by great aristocrats. Often, the competition among the aristocrats is more than it can sustain the best musicians. See also: Amadeus Quick Discussion Question: What is the society shown in the film different from ours in many ways? Recommended answer: There is no valid answer to this question. Some differences are that musicians make a living with the staff of local parents, while in today's society they make a living by selling music. Local parents are not regulated by law. They can do what they want. Men often maintain the same career as their father and their father in front of them. One notable similarity is that older generations disagree with the tastes of a new generation in music. 1. See the discussion question for use with any film as the work of fiction 2. Do you know people like Bach have imprisoned souls? When Bach tried to leave, he said, I don't The castle with his manuscript is allegedly stolen. What is Bach's response? Do you agree or disagree with him? The characteristic of Kappelmeister is what it means to be called sycophant, what does it mean and what does it mean for that person? Bach should be treated differently from everyone else because he has great talent? In Bach's society, his charisma in music benefits him, however. 4.What is the basis of the friendship between Bach and Frederick? 6. Frederick's father changes the path of the film. What is the change? Is it risky for Frederick to protect Bach in front of the Duke? Is it risky for his father to support his son? Discussion questions about ethical issues will facilitate the use of this film to teach ethical principles and important viewing. More questions are listed below. Care (be kind; be compassionate and show you care; show gratitude; forgive others, help those who need help).
