Each person has a different definition of success and a way of measuring achievements. For entrepreneurs, success can mean anything from making money and building a loyal customer base to having more free time with loved ones. Business News Daily asked 16 entrepreneurs about their personal definition of success. 1. Success for me to be able to spend my life in my own way. I no longer have a job - I have a lifestyle and I miraculously always work, but I've never been happier because I love what I do. - Laurie Chick, Founder and CEO of Cheekd 2. Success, for me, is when I'm able to do what I love, and break free from the daily grind commutes, tight schedules and asking permission to have free time. On a basic level, it all comes down to creating independence and freedom for myself through my ideas and hard work. - Jonathan Bennett, co-founder of Popular Man 3. Success listens to my inner knowledge and be brave enough to follow it. It means wasting time and effort on things that feed me and help me feel a greater sense of purpose. - Katrina McGhee, founder of Katrina McGhee Ltd. 4. I feel successful when I work with clients - new or current - and whenever one of my individual ideas helps expand my business. - Susan Padron, personal stylist and founder of Susan Padron Stylist 5. Success is the idea of an idea and its transformation into a profitable company. When you can build a company from nothing to a company that creates enough money to support your family, then you succeed. - Chris Gronkowski, owner of All Decorated and Ice Shaker 6. Success, for me, is the discovery of my true passion and purpose after years of wondering if I will ever do so. To use their natural gifts in a meaningful way to help hurt people is the most enjoyable experience I hope everyone can have at least once in their life. - Mary Kaarto, author and founder of MaryKaarto.com 7. Success for me lives on my core values, priorities and my goals - and knowing that I'm planting the seeds of a legacy that will thrive long after I'm gone. I was able to build a career as an entrepreneur and inventor where I could attend events for my children, do things that makes me thrive every day, and return to the community in ways I could never before. - Marea Ibrahim, founder and CEO of Grow Green Industries 8. Success is now sound in mind, body and spirit. It's accumulating wealth by having an extensive network, and having the knowledge to create others as well. Most importantly, being successful has a work-life balance and make time for your family and friends. - Alicia White, Founder and CEO Alicia White and project petals. 9. My definition of success is the strategic implementation of an idea or goal. Ideas are cheap and plentiful, especially when it comes to new business ventures. business enterprises, that's what matters most. - Charles Dugan, President and Owner of American Image Displays 10. I define success based on how happy our customers are. If they come back to do re-business with us, recommend our brand to someone in their personal network, or write a positive review about our company online, then I know that we are doing something right. In my opinion, success lies in meeting the needs of your customers. - Bob Ellis, owner of the Bavarian Watch Factory 11. Success is not a measure of what is in your pocket or your driveway. Instead, it's a measure of your fitness life - that is, your emotional, physical, social, spiritual and financial health. - Kimberly Barnes, founder of ContentPark 12. On a personal level, success is to be happy with who I am and to love myself. From a business perspective, it is the development of a corporate culture that has a long-term impact that goes beyond itself. - Ethan Nyholm, co-founder of STM Goods 13. My definition of success is building a real company, fixing the real problem, with a mission all my team believes in - one that is built on sustaining yourself and making money to support the cause. - Andy Jackson, CEO and President of MuscleSound 14. Success is able to wake up daily, passionate and optimistic about the future day, knowing that what you do will positively affect others. - Anna Crowe, CEO of Crowe PR 15. Success is not about selling, acquiring, executing or getting rich. You are a success in every moment during which you enjoy the pitch you are at the same time staying motivated to go for more. The ability to love wishing, enjoying what you have and where you are on is my definition of success. - Lynette Louise, founder of Brain and Body 16. Success involves a combination of financial freedom, flexibility and fuss, all while continuing to learn to listen. The sense of giving to support your community by serving as a respected and prosperous leader in your own business is the true definition of success. - Susan Stalte, nutrition consultant in SusanStalte.com August 12, 2013 3 min read Opinions Expressed by Entrepreneur Contributors are their own. Ten years ago, I helped find a business dedicated to helping entrepreneurs bring their business ideas to an end. Since then I have coached and trained hundreds of entrepreneurs. Many of my students have licensed their ideas to powerful companies or brought them to the market on their own, making up their own. I have often wondered what distinguishes successful entrepreneurs from their peers. Are there certain qualities that they share? I think so. But I also think it's important to recognize that timing, luck and just being in the right place at the right time play a role in many success stories. Decades of personal experience and taught me that successful entrepreneurs share these five qualities: 1. 1. unwavering passion. The advice of doing what you love has become something of a cliché. Everyone says: Take your passion. But it's easier said than done. Being an entrepreneur requires commitment and dedication - more than most jobs, I would say. If you are ambivalent or slightly enthralled by your product or service, it is not going to support you through the highs and lows that will inevitably occur. If you find something you love enough to want to share it with others, that love will fuel and give you a purpose. 2. Openness. The most successful entrepreneurs I know never forget how much they can learn from others. They're asking for advice. They're flexible. They soak up the best practices around them like a sponge. Fear of failure can make it easy to grip on your vision with an iron fist, but stiffness won't serve you. 3. The desire to be an expert. Entrepreneurs like a challenge. If they hadn't, they would probably have chosen a different place of work. But as interesting as it is to consider a new area, high achievement entrepreneurs know the benefits of staying in the same industry for a while are huge. When you spend years in the same industry, you learn its history. Knowing what has been done before can help you determine how it can and should move forward. At the same time, you will build a network of relationships to support you in future endeavors, especially when times are lean. This relationship is priceless. A forward-looking approach. Successful entrepreneurs always think about the future. They may move away from their roadmap and that's fine, but they have one in mind. Having a well-established set of goals will keep you from getting stuck. Your goals can constantly evolve, but if you don't know where you want to go, chances are you won't get anywhere. A steady stream of ideas. Having one project that does well is great. But successful entrepreneurs, who I know, do not rest on their laurels. Instead, they keep asking themselves: What's next? They understand that being a successful entrepreneur is a lifestyle choice, not a destination. Accept these qualities and you will become a better entrepreneur. December 30, 2014 4 min read Opinions Expressed by Entrepreneur Contributors are their own. All successful entrepreneurs have three qualities. Adaptability In most cases, what you start doing won't be exactly what you do when you end up successful. As you roll out your venture, you'll find that the things you expected to work well don't work at all. You'll stumble upon something you didn't expect to work out, what would happen. You will find that others in your industry are doing things that will work well for your organization and you will copy them. You have to be able to adapt. We know an entrepreneur who went into business as a residential realtor. When the home sales market collapsed, he turned his business into real estate management, as the two businesses require similar skills but are anticyclical. We have had to morph our own business several times. Polly started her business in 2002 to help small businesses stay compliant with changing labor laws. It planned to conduct a human resources audit. There was a fatal flaw in her plan. Most small business owners don't want to know that they don't meet the requirements. A few months later, it switched to organizational efficiency and workforce development. When we started Whitestone Partners, we had a much broader focus. We tried to do everything. However, over the years we have narrowed down our offerings, specializing in helping businesses manage transitions from micro to small to small to medium-sized. Adaptation is crucial. If you are going to be an entrepreneur, the only thing that will be permanent is the change. You will have to adapt or see your enterprise swallowed up by a growing wave of change. The closest second to adaptability is perseverance. Related: 5 key characteristics every entrepreneur should have2. Persistently, you will encounter bumps on the road. You will lose large customers. Good employees will leave your company, and some may become competitors. The government will change the rules, usually making things more complicated. To succeed, you must be prepared to persist in difficult times. Nothing can take the place of perseverance, and you can not succeed without it. In addition to being ready to persist, you will need financial means to survive. You will need a cash reserve that will see you through lean times. When considering starting a business, assume that everything will take twice as long and cost twice as much as you would expect. If you can't afford it, delay starting your business. Conservatism in the planning phase is often the savior of the future. 3 Work ethic is the ability and willingness to work very, very hard. It is difficult to manage a small business. Your days will be much longer than eight hours. If your week starts on Monday, you'll be 40 hours away on Thursday, but you won't slow down. You'll be on call 24/7. Success as an entrepreneur requires hard, hard work. Running a small business is filled with challenges, but if you adapt, have the desire and the means to save, and are willing to work very hard, you will greatly improve your chances of success. Adaptability, perseverance and diligence to success in small business, but they are three important attributes no matter what your efforts.
