Hook? The boy had to develop his own journey and wildlife, climate and history. Gus chose the Galápagos Islands, the Pacific archipelago of Charles Darwin, for the first time in 1859. For seven days, the duo travelled to the islands, scouting with blue-legged, albatrosses and sea iguanas, while Gus vied with the guide's most spectacular factoids. Father and son snorkel among 250-pound sea turtles, as well as stingrays and sea lions, and elder Kendrick says: I heard my son laughing through his snorkel. Gus's highlight, however, was a deeper and richer bond with his father. We need to talk more than ever, he says, adding: He's a great father. More often than not, when family or out-of-town guests visit Boston, they all have the same to-do item on their list: Duck Tour. And the application extends to all ages - Baby Boomer relatives, friends who are busy leaders, artistic friends, friends who are parents to children of all ages. While it's an activity that many locals don't even experience until they have a friend or relative visiting out of town, this is one you don't want to stay as a tourist. Duck Tours is a unique experience that combines sights and history, while getting to go through the Charles River vehicle you just drove in the city. If you want to see Boston via duck boat, late spring through early autumn is the perfect time to do so. They run from late March to the end of November, although the peak season of all things related to tourism in the city is definitely summer months when the weather is nice and warm. Before booking your spot, follow these tips to make the most of your Boston Duck Tour. TripSavvy/Violet Smirnova You've undoubtedly seen Duck Boats ubiquitous amphibious vehicles across Boston, but there are only three places where you can pick up a tour: the Museum of Science, the New England Aquarium and the Prudential Center. Choose the one that is most comfortable with your home base and/or sightseeing itinerary; Everything is close to major tourist attractions, MBTA stations and eateries. TripSavvy / Violet Smirnova Are your fellow Duck Boat riders a bunch of early risers? If so, make an online booking for 9 or 9:30 p.m. tours at either the Museum of Science or Prudential stops and get an Early Duck discount. (Remember that online-only condition: If you appear in person to buy tickets for early tours, you won't get a discount.) It's also worth noting that only a portion of tickets have been released online, so it's still worth checking one of the ticket offices if the tickets to the date you'd go to have sold out online. There is also a Ride & The Save the program for those who also plans to visit the Museum of Science and the New England Aquarium: Show your Duck Boats ticket and get discounts off the museum entrance, cafeteria, gift shop and theaters. You'll also get a free tour of Harvard Square with your Duck Boats ticket, plus numerous discounts at the Prudential Center and other Boston restaurants and gift shops. So save that ticket a dead end and put it to work – you can save quite a lot! Duck Boats tour with rain or shine, and they don't sail into the river (although, frankly, the splash is quite minimal). Wear layers – it can be windy through the water, and if it's rainy, a light raincoat is always a good idea. Duck Boats are heated and have weather protection, but it's not quite like being closed typical car or truck, so plan accordingly. TripSavvy /Violet Smirnova When on board, the tour is about 80 minutes and guests remain on board for the entire duration. About 20 minutes that are spent on water, an hour on land taking in many of Boston's historic landmarks and neighborhoods. What you see depends on where you pick up your Duck Boat, but popular sites include Boston Public Garden, Boston Common, Boston Public Library, Newbury Street, Quincy Market and TD Garden. These destinations are the kind that make Boston a big city. Thank you for giving us a know! Know!
