Picture: krisanapong detraphiphat / Moment / Getty Images You remember Sunday School, right? You must have made some crafts out of popsicle sticks and learned more about Noah's stories and his ark, Moses and his commandments and David and his slingshot. You've probably sung songs about being in the Lord's army (Yes, sir!) and a fountain that flows deep and wide. But you may have avoided the more complex topics hidden in the pages of the Bible -- in particular, the pages of the New Testament.The Old Testament and the New Testament are two halves of the same Book, but they could not have been more different. The Old Testament? Full of stories of famous Characters from the Bible that you remember from childhood. The New Testament? An emphasis on Jesus - everything he did and what Christians can look forward to. The Old Testament? Principles and parables. The New Testament? Prophecies and plans. The Old Testament? Databases. The New Testament? Revelations. (Literally!) Take a break from the begats of I Chronicles and dive into the Beatitudes of Matthew. Put all your Biblical knowledge to the test with this test on the second half of the Book. See if you are worthy of the Title new Testament Know-It-All or if you need an advanced class in the New Testament know-how! Of course, there may have been other disciples who liked fishing, but these four -- Peter, Andrew, James, and John -- were fishing when they were called to follow Christ. Picture: Shutterstock Compared to the Old Testament, the New Testament contains a lot of non-narrative material; i.e. teachings and philosophy. Much of the New Testament is letters from the apostles to church leaders and fellow evangelists, clarifying the points of theology and writing about best following Christ's example. Where, then, do you find colorful characters? Answer: In the Gospels and in the following book, Acts of the Apostles. Here we meet the twelve disciples of Jesus, including the one who will betray the authorities. We will meet figures of authority who have been threatened by the message of Jesus, both Jews and novels, and also humble, despised people who have taken Jesus' message to heart. The Gospels are full of kings, scholars, lepers, thieves, soldiers, and more. Acts opens a even higher characters. As the Apostles began to travel to the known world to spread the message of Jesus, they met with allies places (such as Gentile communities) and made powerful enemies, especially in Rome. We won't even talk about the book of Revelation, which contains some of the most memorable characters of the New Testament -- though usually not by name. Think of the Beast or the woman dressed in the sun and you'll get what we want to say. Ready to test your knowledge of New Testament characters? Let's make your Sunday School teacher proud! While it is easy to proclaim that everyone should have a will, first we should understand what they are doing. A final will is a legally bound document detailing how your heirs will receive your assets and wealth. But it doesn't come without its limitations. Here's what the last will and wills do and how they play a role in the real estate planning process. What's in a final will? A last will has many details, including the list of what you want to happen to your assets, appoint an executor, name beneficiaries More. This will be a legal document that directs what will happen to assets and dependents after you die. It is important to be thorough and detailed in Va. You may also want to work with your financial advisor and lawyer when preparing one. Divide the assets from your assets into your money, your will describes what you want to happen to your assets. In your will, you will detail how you want certain goods to be handed over. For example, you can leave your children's property or some artwork at a local museum. You can be as specific or as you like, but the more details you provide, the easier it will be to follow. Appoint an ExecutorA last will and will needs an executor, or someone to fulfill the wishes that you detail in your will. Your executor is someone you trust to fulfill your post-life plans by distributing assets and other assets. While you can appoint anyone to be your executor, you should consider someone you fully trust to handle your affairs. It can be a child raised, another relative or someone I know at the professional level, would be a lawyer or financial advisor. Name BeneficiariesAny assets you want to submit will need a beneficiary attached to them. For example, if you pass your home on to a child, your child is the beneficiary. But the beneficiaries are not limited to people. Organisations may also be beneficiaries. If you have valuable artworks, jewelry or other items, you can consider donating them to an organization. You can also donate money. Going through ProracePromate is the legal process of validating a will after you have passed. Depending on your assets and wealth, it could take from a few months to a few years to complete. Your executor has about a month or so to file your document will to the court of succession. Prouze happens with or without a will, but having a will ensures your wishes are carried out as you wished. Probes also deal with debts. Your executor will contact any creditors regarding outstanding debts regarding the use of your assets to pay. After invoices, taxes and other expenses are paid in full, the rest of the goods can be distributed. Allow ChangesIf you made a will at the beginning of your life and the circumstances have changed, you are allowed to update your last will. For example, if you've had copies since you created your will, the updated version should detail your new guardian after you've passed. While a will is a legally binding document, the changes happen. You can make changes to the current will or create a new one to replace the old one. The Least it's good to make changes as soon as they appear. If something happens to you and your will is not updated, the courts decide to handle your business. What won't a will do? While a will has some flexibility when it comes to being updated over the years, there are a few things you can't do after you die. For starters, a will cannot leave money in a living trust, 401 (k) or IRA, especially if you have beneficiaries for each. Also, you can not put beneficiaries in the will. For example, you can't say in your will that your daughter can get the $10,000 you left only after she breaks up with the boyfriend you never liked. Another important detail that your will cannot take care of is your funeral. The family and the executor may not read the will until your arrangements, so it is smart to discuss these details with them earlier in your life or write them down in another document. While Fido is certainly a member of your family, your will also can't leave money for your pet. Instead, your will can tell who becomes Fido's new guardian with instructions for caring for chickens. In the end, a will cannot be written alone. It is important to take the time to draft this important document before the last few days so that your things are cared for. You can write a will or work with a lawyer or financial advisor to make sure you have covered all your assets. It's never too early to draw up a will either, so if you don't have one, consider creating one soon. Bottom LineA will be an important legal step in securing assets and businesses are distributed you like, but it is not the only option. You can also search to build trust. This is where your assets are transferred to a trust, and a trustee manages them. Most trusts skip the succession process and are easier to manage. This can be good for both you and your beneficiaries, since succession can be a long and costly process. Before you create a will, explore post-life options. You may find that there are better choices for your financial situation. Estate Planning Estate Planning Tips is a crucial part of getting older.
