Rockville was chosen for the church location for its relatively large concentration of Catholics, its central location, and its prominence as the County seat. St. Mary's became the church from which other educational mission churches stemmed. Father James Redmond established an eight-member congregation here in 1816. A member of the congregation sold four acres of land to the church for $300. Parishioners helped consume the Georgian-style building, which was the first brick catholic church in the land. The brick bows were rubbed hand to create a contrasting color and texture to the brick walls. The main building was 53 feet tall by 36 feet wide. A 15-foot square extension in the back included a small sacrifice and the pastor's living quarters. Father Redmond hosted the first mass in St. Mary's Church on 14 December 1817. In the 1960s, a church was built next to it, and a loan permit was issued for the old church in 1966. It was saved at the last moment by parishioners and concerned citizens. The American writer, F. Scott Fitzgerald, his wife Zelda, and members of his family are buried in the adjacent cemetery.
