Photo: Hans Vivekl personally believe that everyone should know three folds of origami: a paper faucet, a dollar bill ring, and at least one fancy way to fold a dinner napkin. The best site to teach you how to fold a napkin is Animated Napkins. This site (creator of animated nodes) shows you how to fold dinner napkins into shapes that you can sit on the spot setting. If you've ever thrown a dinner party, this is an easy way to impress people. Here are a few simple folds, and a couple that take longer to get right. Animated Nodes is the perfect site to explore everything about nodes: how to link them to what they read: The design seen above, which takes just three times and is stand-up. Once you get the hang of it, it's easier than folding a shirt. Rosebud: A classic crease that tells your guests: I know that red wine should be very slightly chilled. I was surprised how easy it is to add up, given how fancy it looks when it's done. Diagonal Pockets: Put this design flat on the table and tuck the silverware into your pockets. Bird of Paradise: Turn napkins into the Sydney Opera House. This design takes more work and a bit of finesse. If you already know a little origami, you should find out. Each folding guide gives step-by-step written instructions along with pictures, as well as notes on the difficulties and tricks in each time. (If you've ever struggled through an wordless origami guide, you know the meaning of these extra tips.) Designs are categorized by how much you have to fold the napkin in half before you start-uncomfortable if you're just trying to find a beautiful design, but handy if you're in the catering area and need gussy up to 80 napkins that are all stored a quarter of a time. You can also see tall designs, designs with pockets, and designs that you can easily stack and store while folded. Admittedly, a few simple, origami-inspired folds are a quick and easy way to take your tableescape from ordinary to conversation-worthy. Take a replica from old school with new school tricks, patterns and more colorful dining linen. As for how to make each design happen, I'll let the photos do most of the conversation. Courtesy of Brit and Co. 1. Pottery Pocket How is it convenient? This would be perfect for a less formal, picnic-inspired table setting. It would also be a cute way to save the dishes in order to buffet style the dining room. Courtesy of Brit and Co. 2. Heart It takes two napkins - it's kind of like those old best friends necklaces, but made out of napkins! That would be the sweetest way to show off napkins for an impromptu dinner for two. Courtesy of Brit and Co. 3. I like the idea of using this option to hide a small gift or favor as a surprise to your guests. Depending on the type of event you are hosting, you can put a photo, personal note or business card inside. Courtesy of Brit and Co. 4. Onion This option requires a ribbon or napkin ring around the center. Naturally, I went with a 3D-printed napkin ring. That's right - I pressed one button to print out this bright turquoise geometric ring in less than ten minutes. Courtesy of Brit and Co. 5. Lotus Finally, the mother of the boat all napkins folding tutorials. It makes a great centerpiece - although it's so beautiful, you can't make it out! As you can see in the photos, it's like creating an old school fortune teller or cootie spectacle. Just like you would be a fortune teller, flip the napkin between steps to complete the next time, and make the final lotus shape, giving the bottom time on each corner of the tug to invert it a bit.
