The free version of the service allows you to use the FLOW Deezer feature to discover new artists, and you can listen to playlists and mixes based on your personal taste. It also has lyrical extracts, unlimited playlist creation, and blends based on individual artists. There is a premium version that gives you more features such as higher sound quality, offline listening and Android Auto support if you want it. The only caveat is that the app seems to be a little rough around the edges. Google Play Music/YouTube MusicPrice: Free/$9.99-$14.99 per month Google Play Music is an increasingly popular option. Its hallmark is the ability to download 50,000 of its own songs for personal streaming. Of the free music apps on this list, this is the best option if you want to combine your current collection with an online service. The free version of Play Music allows you to stream music and listen to a variety of curated playlists. The paid version comes with more perks, but the free version isn't half bad. The service also now includes podcasts for both free and paid users. Google Play is now sunseting in favor of YouTube Music so eventually Google Play Music will cease to exist. Enjoy while you can.iHeartRadioPrice: Free/$9.99 at monthHeartRadio is one of the most popular free music apps out there. It's a radio app where you can listen to different stations based on your individual tastes, and it also comes with seasonal radio stations and things like podcasts, talk radio, and comedy shows. It also includes AM and FM radio stations that support streaming data, and you can even listen to news and sports. It's a versatile app with a modern The Material Design interface comes with little things like Chromecast support, Android Wear support, and Android Auto support. Jango RadioPrice: FreeJango Radio is a kind of wildcard in the free space of music apps. It has a variety of music from both big names and independent artists alike. Unlike most, this service allows artists pay for the plays, which means you can hear the song that the artist paid to hear. This gives Jango his operating income, which helps him stay free. There are some potential ethical issues. However, there aren't any ads on the service, and it's a good way to discover some new stuff. LiveXLivePrice: Free (with ads) / $3.99 - $9.99 per monthLiveXLive replaced Slacker Radio in 2019 and has many of the same features. You can listen to free music from a variety of stations that cover a wide range of genres. It basically acts as a green and black Pandora in that sense. You can get a premium version to add more features if you want them, but the free version works well enough. It also puts the emphasis on live music on a simple on-demand or station streaming service. He has potential, but he still needs work. We also strongly dislike that it only uses carrier billing or credit card through the app, not Google Play subscription support. Pandora MusicPrice: Free /$4.99 - $9.99 per monthPandora Radio is another of the most popular free music apps. Its key feature is its simplicity and cross-platform support. You can easily jump straight and listen to music you enjoy on almost any platform you can think of and your stations sync in all of them. Their contents library has grown a lot over the last few years. The experience as a whole is very positive. They also have a full, on-demand streaming service for those who want a Spotify-style experience without leaving Pandora. The free stuff is still working fine though. SoundCloudPrice: Free/$9.99 per month SoundCloud is one of the most unique free music apps because it doesn't just focus on what's popular right now. In fact, literally any artist can upload to SoundCloud and that content can be played by anyone. The service now boasts 125 million tracks, more than anyone has ever listened to, ever. It also has various shows, podcasts and other content to enjoy. The free version is mostly independent artists with a paid version of you more popular music of big names. Most people who use this for free music are looking for those indie artists anyway, so this is a good option. SpotifyPrice: Free/$9.99-$14.99 per monthSpotify was just great for music streaming, and it's one of the most popular free music apps ever. It boasts a generous library, curated stations and playlists, as well as the ability to create your own stations and playlists if you choose to. The version of the service is not as reliable as the paid version, but there are still many things that will love the free service Spotify. The app also comes with some lightweight Material Design, Chromecast support, and the tablet version actually has more features than the mobile version. Spotify also has a special free music app, Spotify Stations, available on Google Play as well. TuneInPrice: TuneInPrice: / $9.99 per monthIt is true that TuneIn Radio is better known for its talk radio, podcast, and comedy radio offerings than for its music, but there are still many ways to enjoy free music on TuneIn. It boasts more than 100,000 stations in total, which covers almost every genre you can think of, and that also includes AM and FM radio stations that can be streamed according to the data. There isn't many reasons to get a premium version for music alone, but it also offers audiobooks, live sports broadcasting, and more. YouTubePrice: Free /$12.99 per monthYouTube is probably the world's most popular free music app. You can find pretty much everything you've ever heard. Every band ever has a presence on YouTube. You can also find official music videos, live shows, and even local bands from time to time. You can also make playlists, get recommendations, and more. YouTube Premium is a bit expensive, but you don't need it. Tons of people use YouTube all the time for music that they like. If we missed any of the best free music apps for Android, tell us about them in the comments! Just like many of you out there, I spend my day rushing from place to place, trying to get a thousand things done at once. Sometimes, though, there's just too much stress. So I wanted to do better by plugging in some favorite tunes and let the music wash away all the problems. Oh yes! Whether it's riding the subway to work, jogging in the park, or just chilling the house, music is perhaps the best way to help us get into a good mood. If you're the type who needs to have music on hand at all times, then rest easily because Android body has you covered! Also check out some of the best apps of 2012 for Android! Android offers lots of apps dedicated to music lovers, so you can listen to your favorite tunes with just a few taps and napkins. Whether you're a neat freak who organizes music according to the artist, song title, and genre (in alphabetical order, of course), or you love shuffling tunes around until you find the perfect song at the moment, Android really offers everything you need to enjoy your music collection. Let's take a look at some of the best Android apps for music lovers. ShazamFor many Android lovers out there, Shazam is an app when it comes to discovering music. Playing about 10 seconds for almost any son, he connects to the cloud and finds a melody for you. If you've never tried it before, you absolutely have to do it now. You can just hold your Android device to music and let Shazam work his magic even so far as to find the texts for you. It also allows you to share tags of your favorite music on Facebook and Twitter. If you want to go even further, you can watch music videos of your songs on YouTube or download the latest tracks from the Amazon MP3 store. Shazam helps you stay up-to-date your favorite songs and artists without ever breaking a sweat. Absolutely awesome! for Android on AppBrainDigitally Imported Radio There are times when even your list of hand-picked songs just won't make the cut and you're looking to have a fresh stock of tunes delivered right on your Android device. Well, with a digital radio import app, you'll be able to choose from 37 different radio channels, each dedicated to playing the hottest and newest songs from every genre you can imagine. No more shuffling around the songs available on your device for a song you haven't heard in a while. With digital imported radio, you'll listen to songs you haven't heard at all! Digital imported radio for Android on AppBrainSoundHoundHave you ever experienced hearing a snippet of a song, then with it stuck in your head for the rest of the day without even recognizing the artist or the title of the song? If you're anything like me, you try to remember, but often can't, after the fact. Much in the way Shazam features above, SoundHound does, too. With SoundHound, you never have to worry about suffering from UIS (unsubscribed song syndrome) ever again! You can pretty much enter anything related to a song in this app - a 4-second snippet, a one-line lyric, or even just your own voice humming the melody of a song - and this great app will define the song for you. No more searching around on the internet looking for that song ever again! You can identify an unlimited number of songs with SoundHound, and share them on Facebook or Twitter as soon as you find them. Also, commentators all over this site and blogosphere claim that it works much better than Shazam, but we'll have that for you to decide. Let us know! Both are great to have, however. SoundHound for Android on AppBrainDoubleTwist Player There's a lot of people who love to be meticulous about their song lists, and if you're one of them, doubleTwist Player is a wise app to have in your arsenal!
