More Last updated: December 15, 2020 The problem with most phone headphones is that they look a lot like Judy, the (now retired) Time-Life operator. ArialPhone might be the antidote. Perfect for free agents, its wireless connection to the computer and its light-forming trim keep you connected and mobile. Speech recognition technology allows you to make calls while dropping a dog or dealing with FedEx. The ArialPhone database that comes with your computer also provides an interface with Microsoft Outlook and Outlook Express: Just say the name of the person you want to call (over the Internet or the old-fashioned way), and you're there. The phone operates within 150 m of the base (and through the walls), and future software will offer voice control of digital-entertainment components. The ArialPhone costs $399.
