Photo Big Dodzy on Unsplash Hearing the word Michelin, you can imagine the most glamorous place with exquisite tiny portions and waiters who must have visited the army. Or, if you're anything like me, you might think of Disney animated film Ratatouille and Ego dissatisfied with clenched lips when it tastes good. Whatever it is, Michelin asks for a fair association with status, quality and excellence - like the Oscars and the Grammys. In 2020, two Czech restaurants were included in the Michelin-starred guide - Field for the third year and La Degustation Bohême Bourgeoise around the 10th year. The Michelin Red Guide comes out every year a list of restaurants that should leave an unforgettable experience, rewarding up to 3 stars in total. Both Field and La Tasting Bohemia have been holding one star for years. La Degustation Bohême is an elegant restaurant that, according to its website, offers an interesting twist in 19th-century Czech cuisine. As you'd expect, in Michelin-starred restaurants, Le Degustation Bohême pays great attention to the taste and enrichment of your taste - it's more of an experience than a source of food. Their sommelier will help you choose the perfect drink to praise the dish. Its name unobtrusively invites you to order their tasting menu, as, supposedly, back in 2006, when they first opened, they became the first tasting restaurant in the Czech Republic. Cozy and stylish, Field offers a unique opportunity to transfer to Scandinavia, sitting comfortably in the Old City of Prague. Cooking in the Scandinavian style, the perfect selection of drinks and a relaxing atmosphere - a recipe for a magical evening. Some of the field's specialties, according to the Michelin Red Guide, include mouthwatering goose liver, buckthorn, and pike perch. Although Field is a fairly new addition to the Michelin Guide, it actively builds a strong reputation with its professional cuisine, high quality and charming atmosphere. Unfortunately, some Czech restaurants have recently lost their Michelin status: for example, the restaurant Alcron, headed by its chef Roman Paulus, was stripped of its star in 2018. The restaurant is located at Radisson Blu Alcron Prague. We cannot say yet what exactly led the inspectors to this decision. This is confirmed by independent reviews. We do not accept the feedback we receive from our guests lightly, commented Michal Chur, the hotel's director, according to the Prague Guide. Aside from the stellar rating, Michelin also gives an award known as Bib Gourmand, which is due to honor those restaurants that have high quality menus but not much price. This year it includes four Czech restaurants: exquisite Italian Divinis, a kind of Esko, unusual Asian Sanshaw and cozy Na Kopci. About whether you're more into Czech, Italian, French or Asian cuisine - we recommend you give some of these restaurants a try for a special occasion or an unforgettable evening. On World Vegetarian Day, Michelin inspectors give us their recommendations for those who eat a plant-based diet. We have created a list of the best luxury hotels in Prague, Czech Republic. Hope you'll like it. We think this might be the best of its kind around. Tip: Set dates to see room prices! 27-image Luxury Hotel.
